Out of Today and Out of Tonight

By FRANCES STEVENS, '26

Out of today and out of tonight
Comes word for the flight:
Spur to flank and taut rein dropped—
A plunge, a rush, a first hill topped,
And—follow a light!

And it's run—run—
Under the sea and over the sun,
Fleeter, hotter, fast as you're able,
And never, never see the stable
Till the full day's done.

No longer side by side
But scatter, break, and ride—
Jump the fences, pound the road.
You shall leap where the lightning glowed,
You shall plow the tide.

Ride up and high—
Loving the earth and loving the sky,
Into the night to a far city,
Past life's laughter, past life's pity—
To do and to die.

God give you keen sight
To be brave—to be right—
To ride and sing and follow the light
Out of today and out of tonight!

AUTHOR'S NOTE

A class poem is a tremendous responsibility! At first I thought of nice calm things—rivers widening to meet the sea, and “standing with reluctant feet,” roadways running east and west, and “never the twain shall meet,” and oh, all those things—opened doorways, ships going out to sea, ladders climbing upward. I tried to get inspiration from music, and suddenly there flashed across the air to me Tschaikowski's 1812 Overture. I knew then I could write no philosophical or calm poem. I tried to think of youth as it really is, and it did not seem philosophical, but impatient and impetuous and eager and running like a young horse, somehow. Here it is. Perhaps it seems rough and noisy and imperfect, but so is youth.

F. M. S.

Class History of 1926

By STANLEY HIPPI, '26

Roll back the scroll of fast-advancing years,
And gaze a while upon the years now past;
Regard the course the senior vessel steers
Before it gains Commencement Port at last.

Four years the welcome breeze has filled the sails;
The willing crew has worked with eager hands;
And now the good ship leaves the watery trails
And slowly glides to port in promised lands.

Four years—and now the transient trip is done;
The sails come down; this ship will sail no
more;
The crew is paid, yet somehow everyone
Is loath to quit the deck and go ashore.

Four years is but a little breathing space
To man, who travels on life's lengthy way,
Yet we must run it quickly, as a race,
And hardly stop to pass the time of day.

So let us, ere we look for trails ashore,
Before we seek new ramparts to be scaled,
In passing, turn, and one brief moment more,
Look back upon the course that we have sailed.

PART I—THEY COME! THEY COME!
Scene—Seen and not heard.
Setting—Mostly on the fountains.
Characters—Juvenile and immature.

On the steps before these portals,
Scared and dumb,
Several hundred verdant mortals
Chewed their gum.
They were very humble creatures then, as anyone could see,
Not at all the mighty persons that they now profess to be.
There they were,
To be sure,
And they shook with awful fright.
They had come
With their gum
Just as soon as it grew light;
For they each possessed a pencil and a very real desire
To assail these halls of learning and to set the world on fire.
Anyway,
On that day
Opportunity came by,
And she stopped and hit her knuckles on the door of Oak Park High;

For that trembling, frightened mass,
Green as any well-kept grass,
Was the present high and mighty great majestic senior class.

When James perceived the rabble
That had gathered out in front,
When he heard the awful babble, then he gave
a little grunt,
And he took his keys and opened up the doors
and let them in!
Though he muttered as he looked at them, "To do it is a sin."

When at last those freshmen draped their forms
about in 102,

Mr. Ketcham and Miss Weckel came and told them what to do.

Mr. Ketcham waved his club aloft in any old direction,

And he said, "Regard the seniors. They're the acme of perfection,

And if you do the things they do, and don't the things they don't,

Then I'll be nice and sweet to you, but otherwise I won't.

Or go not up at all,

For he that mounts the right hand stairs

Is climbing to a fall.

And go ye down the right hand stairs

Or stay ye at the top,

For who goes down the left hand stairs

Is pretty sure to stop.

For East is East and West is West, and never
the twain shall meet,

Till the freshmen get the stairs confused when they rush upstairs to eat."

Miss Weckel climbed the soap box then and spoke with deep conviction,

"Now boys and girls, don't waste your time consuming modern fiction,

But take your lessons home at night

And study till you get them right;

Then sleep until the morning,

And if you do the things I say,

Your name you will perceive some day

The Honor Roll adorning."

The freshmen clapped their little hands and shouted, "We will do it."

"Then go ahead," Miss Weckel said,

"You'll never live to rue it."

And thus the class of '26 began its envied upward flight;

In many homes that freshman year the lamps
burned brightly through the night;

And every eve you might perceive

Those freshmen homeward reeling

To study books that by their looks,

Ascended to the ceiling.

Yes, they burned the midnight oil and perspired with honest toil, till the freely flowing sweat got their forms and features wet. Then they put their books away, doffed their clothes and hit the hay, till the crowing rooster spoke, and rejoicing they awoke. Then they took their books in hand, covered several miles of land, and with loud and joyful roar, galloped through the high school door. To their deskrooms then they went on their studying intent, calmly passed from class to class, mingling with the common mass. But they knew their lessons well and their heads began to swell, for they cornered all the A's in those balmy freshman days. But the year approached its close, and the freshmen all arose, took their books beneath their arms and departed for the farms, for the lakes and for the hills, where the dad must pay the bills.

Thus at last the year was done
And the freshmen, every one,
Took their books and calmly sauntered out the doors.

But they all came back next year,
Though it makes me shed a tear,
For they came back bluff and boisterous sophomores.

PART II—GOING UP IN THE WORLD (3rd Floor)

Scene—After School Class.

Setting—Traps for unwary teachers.

Characters—Bad actors.

Loud and long
Rang the song
That the sophomores stood singing.
Good and strong,
All along
Through the halls the notes went ringing;
For this mob was big and bold and bad when
it returned that year,
And their singing made Miss Richey mad when it assailed her ear.
They lifted up their voices high
And didn't give a hang.
The song rose up and hit the sky, and this is what they sang:

As we stand before the portals of a new scholastic year, we poor striving, struggling mortals feel a great compelling fear, for the teachers are returning to these honored halls of learning, and the most of us are yearning not to see them all appear.

There are many of our teachers that we cannot mention here, keeping us poor creeping creatures in a state of mortal fear, and we wish that in the summer, they'd been married to the plumber or eloped with some poor drummer, and would not be back this year.

Miss Richey waved her flail about, and thus she put them all to rout

With dire and dreadful warnings.
She said that if they weren't good and didn't do the things they should
They'd have to make up mornings.
But sophomores—well, sophomores
Will always be just sophomores,
And so they didn't heed her,
And through that wild and woolly year,
I'm sorry, but I greatly fear
A chase they sure did lead her.
Down the sweet by-paths of pleasure, several strolled and went astray,
And the Honor Roll diminished in a corresponding way.
Girls and parties, dances and shows,
Had these poor sophomores caught by the nose.
Down—down—down the grades all slid,
Till the poor reports their features hid.
But these sophs were wearing their first long pants,
They had deep bass voices and they loved romance.
So they left their books locked up at school
And they lived according to a self-formed rule.
They all chewed gum and they didn't overwork,
And they grinned at the teachers with a half shamed smirk.

They were dull and slow,
And they muttered "I dunno,"
And they laughed at the teachers,
"HO—HO—HO!"
But the ones that wandered in this bad sad way
Meekly stood and pondered on a future day,
And they worked and worked
And worked and worked,
Just as before
They'd loafed and shirked.
Through outside study and the summer school way
They at last climbed back with their class to stay.
We really ought to give our thanks
To one who helped preserve our ranks.
Miss Richey labored
Day and night
To try to keep us headed right.

PART III.—WE'RE GETTING THERE

Scene—Most anywhere.

Setting—Out for fame and glory.

Characters—Developing.

Chee hee—Chee ha—
Chee hee ha ha—
'26—'26—
Rah—Rah—Rah.
In nineteen hundred twenty-five,
Our classy class
Began to thrive.
Upon our feet we all uprose
And officers we quickly chose.
Al Adams was the president,
And Mary Abbott helped him out,

While Frances Clark the letters sent,
And Givens chased the coins about.
Fran Hubbard worked herself to death
And often paused to get her breath
Because she had to carry
About with her, the poor dear lass,
The chosen colors of the class,
Composed of gray and cherry.
Lyman Eldredge led our cheer
When we yelled it loud and clear—
But no more;
For he slipped away one day,
Leading us along life's way
On before.

*Now in fairer halls than these
Floats his voice upon the breeze
Soft and fair;
"Lymie" leads in sweeter cheers
Than have ever touched our ears—
Over there.*

That junior year we started out to win a never dying name,
And started looking round about to gather up some lasting fame.
About as soon as we began,
We stopped our education,
And to the Stadium we ran
To see its dedication.
The flag rose slowly through the air
And flapped its folds in pride that day;
It reached the top and floated there,
And then the band began to play.
The Austin football team had come to mix in friendly fray,
And fight 'em, fight 'em, fight 'em was the order of the day.
John Colovus and Burright showed those fellows how to play;
They fought and fought and fought 'em, and we won the game, I'd say.
Well, we juniors started out to climb to dizzy,
dazzling heights
And soon we'd clambered up the stairs to fame
some fourteen flights.
Pa Bobbitt said
For ten long years
He'd bowed his head
And shed real tears.
He hoped to see some junior class
In honor grades the school surpass.
At any rate it seemed our uncle needed some consoling,
And so we broke some records in the sport of honor rolling.
We thought perhaps we ought to try our hands
at something new,
And so we planned to give a prom, as juniors
sometimes do.
The Prom was great;
We even state

It was the best we ever gave.
If any person, man or beast,
Denies our statement in the least,
He is a foul, yet truthful knave.

As juniors we performed great feats. We joined the clubs and ate their eats. We had some juniors on the teams, and more that made them in their dreams. Some joined with Scribblers' noble men and helped to wield the bloody pen. In Lincoln Club some settled down and sometimes gave a learned frown. With Burke Club some began to meet and wisely lingered in their seat. In Forum some exposed our flag and let their tongues begin to wag. In Drama Club upon the stage the juniors proved the season's rage. We edited a six page Trap and tossed it in the public's lap. You wonder where we learned these tricks? Ah, we're the class of '26.

PART IV—WITH BANNERS BLOWING
Scene—Most everywhere.

Setting—The world on fire.

Characters—Monarchs of all they survey.

Once more
We filtered through the door
To sit and over books to pore,
But now we were mature.
The noblest work of God or man,
Of any race or tribe or clan
The senior is, for sure.
As soon as we were settled here,
We started to electioneer
And choose some officers to lead our class in this, our senior year.
Art Abbott is our president,
And well indeed he does his part,
And anyone can plainly see that we are followers of art.
Marg Williams holds the second place
And she has helped to set the pace,
While Winnie Heal applies the pen to paper
with a native grace.
Bill Hales we hail with pure delight
Because he keeps the shekels bright,
While Franny Hubbard bears the flag and furnishes a pleasing sight.
"Chee hee,"
Sez he,
And waves his arms
Like windmills on the old-time farms,
A cheerful fellow he appears,
This Otts Loven who leads our cheers.
At Christmas time the girls and boys began to think about their toys,
But still we had a little time to stop and think of others' joys.
But when we sold the Red Cross stamps,
The boys were beaten by the vamps
Who always take the shield.
When Franny Clark began to sell,
The higher sex conceived real well

Our doom was Red Cross sealed.
 For years we all had struggled up with eyes upon the silver cup
 And sought to make the grade.
 One day they shined it clean and bright
 And then exposed it to our sight,
 Shined up for dress parade.
 Then Mildred Magnuson appeared, and Mildred
 Magnuson was cheered,
 For she had won the right to hug the much contested silver mug.
 Stewart Brown
 Scribbled down
 Thoughts he carried in his head,
 And he won the D. A. R. cup when his offering was read.
 The Junior Prom caused quite a fuss,
 But proms were ancient stuff to us.
 Our senior play,
 The seniors say
 Was quite an admirable thing.
 The noble Crichton tried his hand at butlering and being king.
 Hales and Kinderman were good at home or on the desert isle;
 They both excelled at chopping wood and doing shampoos up in style.
 Bunny Rapp was good, yes, very,
 As the charming Lady Mary.
 Stearns was Ernest, but his keys
 Didn't fit poor Tweenie's heart;
 Though he begged on bended knees, Jeanne
 Godolphin said, "Depart."
 Yes, the play was well-nigh perfect; not a single thing went wrong;
 There won't be another like it till the next one comes along.
 Crichton stirred the campfire—
 Higher leaped the flames;
 With the flames leaped higher
 Hopes, desires, and dreams.
 Then the campfire languished—
 Lower fell each flame—
 Promised empires vanished,
 But—Bill played the game.
 Just a glowing campfire,
 Slowly burning bright,
 Casting through the shadows
 Gleams of reddish light;
 In its ruddy embers,
 In its dying gleams,
 Written is the record
 Of man's lost dreams.
 Of man's sweet lost dreams.
 This class has done some mighty deeds, but it's too late to tell them all,
 For James pulls down the window blinds—the shades of night begin to fall.
 We sometimes saw about this place
 A man with strong, yet kindly face;
 Our troubles didn't tire him.
 He's one on whom we all depend; he'll always be a cherished friend;

 We love and we admire him.
 Yes, Mac has meant a lot to us as brother,
 friend, and guide,
 And we have learned his matchlessness while working at his side.
 "What is so rare as a day in June?"
 The senior sings, as he crosses the stage,
 Blithely singing a carefree tune,
 And lightly turning a new life's page.
 He takes his roll upon his back
 And starts to climb life's winding track.
 He lightly hums
 His little song,
 And then he turns
 And says,
 "So Long."

Let's linger just one moment in these halls,
 Before we start to climb the road ahead,
 And think of all the pleasant things these walls Contain—sweet thoughts that all too soon are dead.

For long we labored here—nor noted time,
 As with his rapid pace he strode ahead;
 We thought as commonplace the things sublime
 Around us here—until the years were fled.

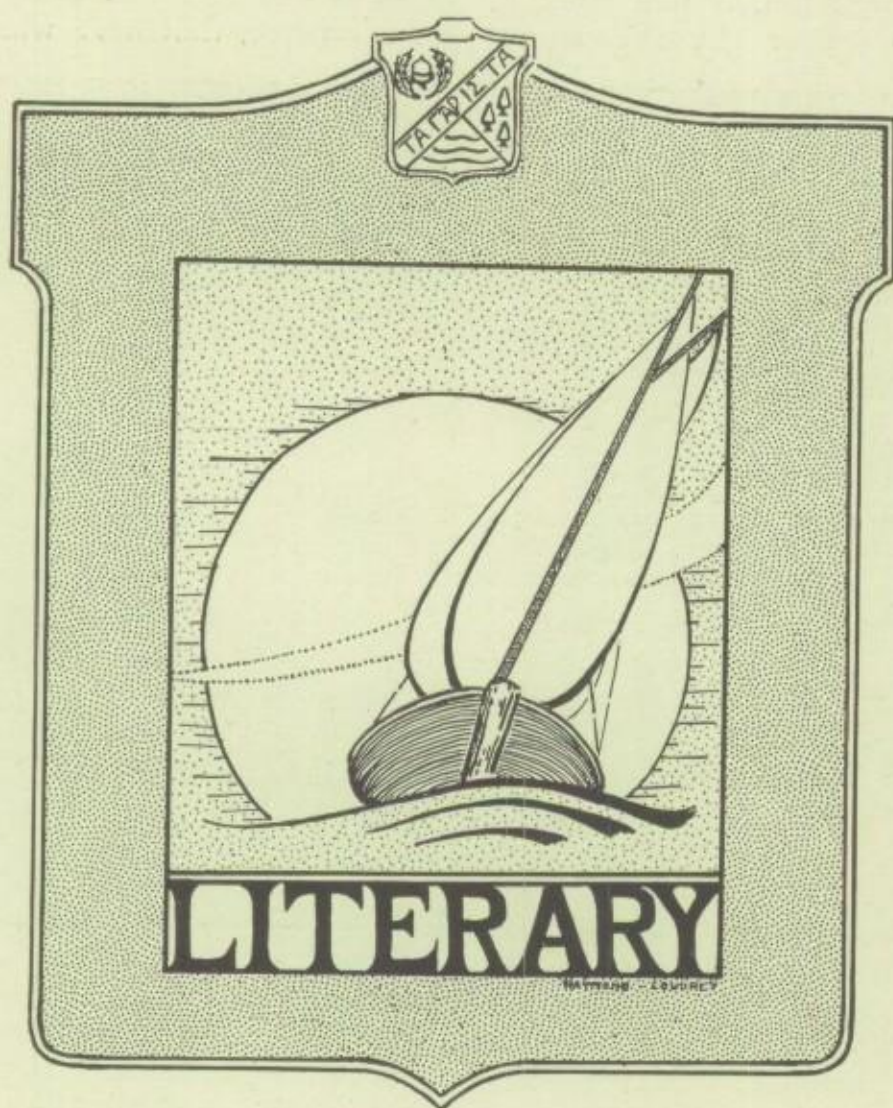

Then suddenly, we looked with startled eyes,
 And saw the beauty that around us lay,
 But when we sought to clasp our new found prize,
 Already it was hid in yesterday.

We walk the halls. We seek to turn the glass
 Of hours backward four brief fleeting years;
 We seek to trace our courses o'er, and pass
 To live again our hopes and joys and fears.

Turn back—but now the present casts a veil
 Across the past—and naught but memories
 Can take us back, blown softly from the vail
 Of yesterdays upon the timeless breeze.

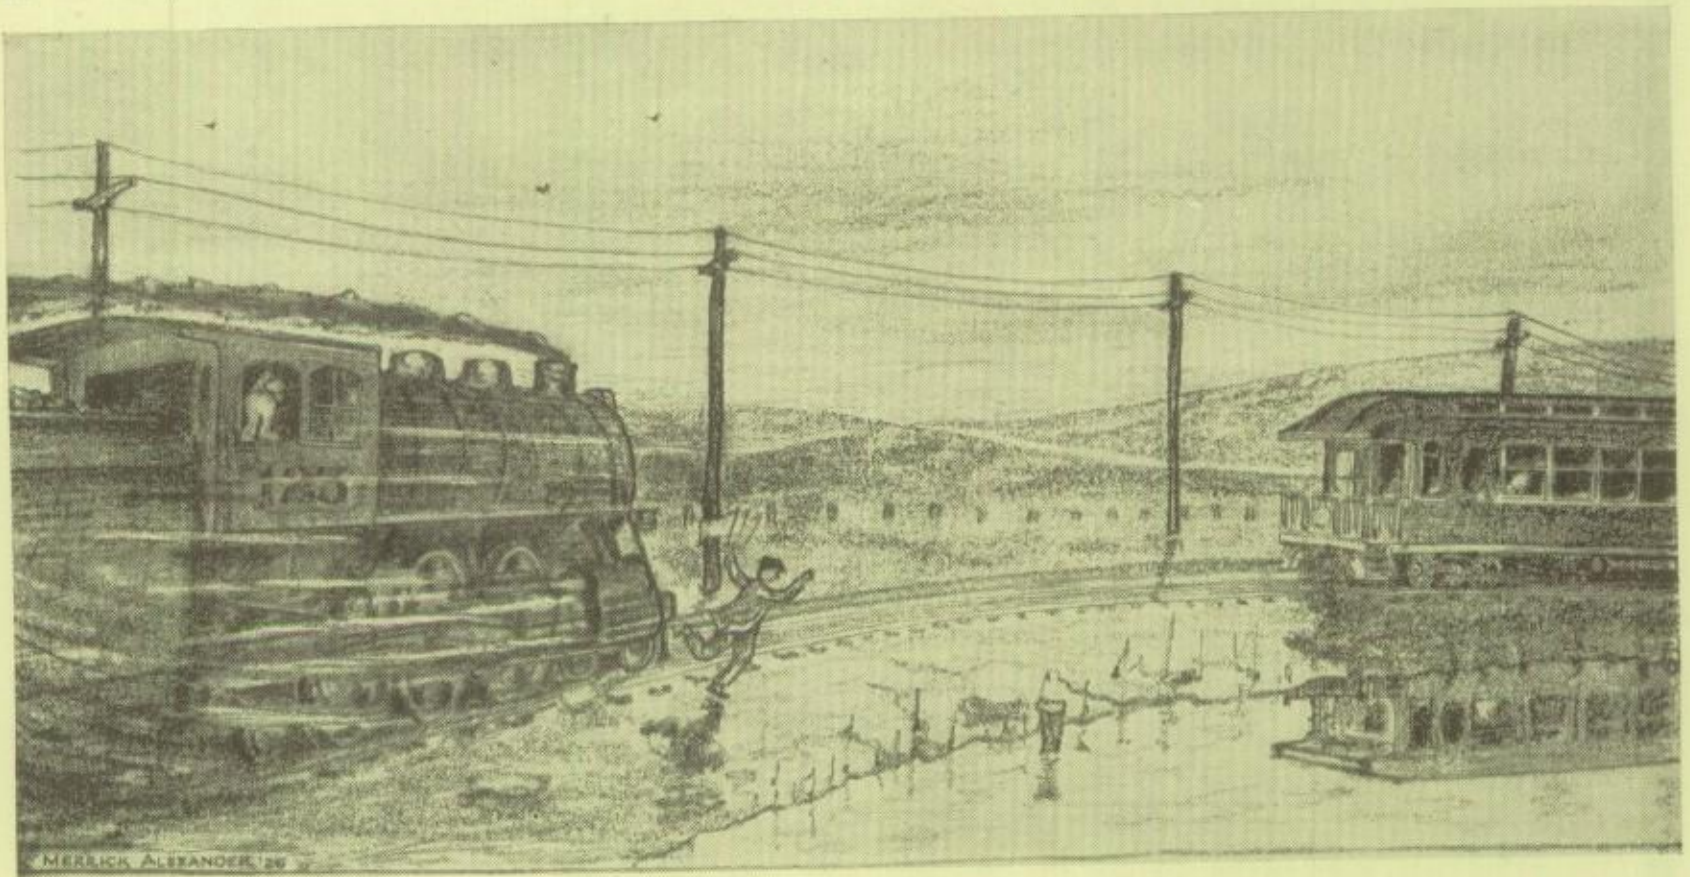

Extra 395

THE North Western Railway, some three years ago, celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of its creation. Perhaps never in its history has there been a president of the road, of whom all would say, "He was the best of all." But if you should be lucky enough to get yourself admitted to the councils of the roundhouse, where veteran engineers put their heads together that the ancient order of things may not be forgotten, if you should, as I said, chance to overhear these councils retell each other, for they are loath to speak to outsiders of the man whom all called friend, Sam Doran. In time of sickness he had aided them; in times of trouble and of death he had comforted them, and they are not of that stamp of men by whom such things are lightly regarded.

The appearance of the man himself was reassuring. One felt as one looked into those eyes of his, or listened to the deep, steady tones of his voice, that here was a man to be trusted of the "hoggers," one thing you would certainly learn: that while there has been no president of undoubtedly superior merit, yet one engineer is recognized as having been the master of his trade. All agree and unite in praise at the mention of the name of Sam Doran. Now that he is dead, young engineers uphold his reputation—engineers who know of his skill in the cab from the tales of their older associates.

They speak with truth and pride when they boast of his perfection; but of the man himself they speak not, for they know not. Only from those who were his associates through years come the descriptions which do him justice. They will tell you a little of the hand which held the throttle, but they will speak most of that heart which held his fellow-workers. Never was there a man more dear to all about him, nor one more sincere and earnest with those who held him dear. This is the reason why, if you watch closely, you will see the eyes of his former associates sparkle as they tell and above all others, a man of sterling character and unbendable will. Six feet tall, of stocky build, he towered a giant above most men. On first sight, the glance of the stranger was attracted at once by his eyes, steel-gray normally, but flashing green in moments of anger. His whole face was in keeping with the character of those eyes; straight nose, compressed lips, firm chin, square jaw, all combined to confirm the first impression of a man of honesty, and great strength of character.

Seven years ago my story begins, during the nineteenth year of Doran's service as an engineer. Aside from his trains and his engines, Doran had but one interest in the world—his eighteen-year-old son, Bill, whom he had raised alone since the death of the boy's mother six years before. Every hour of his spare time, every extra dollar of his salary, went to find ways and means to help the boy onward in the struggle for success in life, and the lad repaid his father with supreme devotion.

For six years the pair had been almost constantly together, and when, one late September morning, the boy left Clinton to go east to college, the old engineer experienced difficulty in controlling his feelings at the parting. Yet in spite of his loneliness he was happy to be able, at the end of five years of saving, to send his son to a fine eastern school, where he might pursue his chosen study, law.

One afternoon the following May, Doran brought his heavy train to a grinding stop in the Chicago Terminal, the eastern end of his run. All afternoon as he sat in the cab, he had thought of the pleasure which would be his when his boy should return in June for the summer vacation. But for all his loneliness during the winter he had really been happy at the thought of the advantages which Dan would reap from a course at the Harvard Law.

So, thinking on these things, Doran swung down the gangway of his engine to the platform below, that summer afternoon. He stood musing for a moment in the lee of the great drivers. A telegraph messenger stepped up and touched him on the shoulder. Starting from his reverie, he turned and took the proffered message. Bill had promised to send word when he should know the exact date of his return to Clinton, and his father hoped that this message might tell of an early reunion.

For a moment the old fellow stood motionless. Then, his hands trembling as he held the message, he said hoarsely, "It isn't true. It can't be. Why, my God, no one would hurt my boy. It's a lie, I tell you." He whirled furiously, expecting to find the messenger behind him, but the boy had disappeared. Then as the truth of the message telling of his son's murder dawned upon him, Doran's eyes flashed with rage. He leaned against the drivers at his side, his whole body shaking with grief and fury. Out of his blazing eyes, down over his weatherbeaten face, the tears flowed as they had not since he had become a man. His great shoulders lifted and fell with his sobbing.

The next day he left for the east, with all the ready money he could gather. He spent the better part of a year in Boston using up the savings of a life time in the vain effort to avenge the murder of his boy.

Perhaps you remember the trial. It was in all the newspapers, for it made a fine story: how Richard Bainbridge, the wealthy son of the great California oil king, shot and killed Bill Doran in pursuance of a quarrel which the young millionaire had himself originated. It was wanton murder, murder for the sake of the pleasure of killing, and all the country called for the execution of Bainbridge. But millions and influence triumphed over justice as they have many a time before and since, and the young murderer was acquitted.

Doran, beaten, returned to Clinton, a broken man. His old run was given back to him, and his friends did everything in their power to make his life pleasant. It was of no avail. Doran seemed capable of no emotion save the most bitter hatred of all with whom he came in contact. One day in the course of a conversation with the minister of the church, which he had once attended, the holy man spoke of the comfort which God might bring to the afflicted. Doran looked up, fixed the man with his eyes, and said with a sneer, "God? God, did you say? Why you fool, there is no God." It represented the old fellow's philosophy to perfection.

Several years after the trial the news came to the Galena Division, that a special train was to be handled eastward from Clinton to Chicago. It had been chartered by the oil magnate, Bainbridge, to carry him and his son, together with a party of business associates, from Los Angeles to New York, for the completion of a great merger. It was due at Clinton at ten-thirty in the morning of August fifth, and was to be delivered over by the Galena Division, to the New York Central at Chicago at twelve thirty-five. It was a fast schedule—one hundred and thirty-eight miles in one hundred and twenty-five minutes—but the road was being well paid.

Doran was on the Clinton platform when the Special, her brake shoes wringing a stream of sparks, slid into the station. The East Iowa Division had handed her over to us on the second of the schedule. At the tail end of the four-car train was Bainbridge's private car. On the Galena Division, the 395, a fast engine of the "D" class, had been selected to pull the train. Amid a swarm of car tinks, it was backed down onto the Special. A minute later Conductor Adamson raised his hand in the "highball," the engineer opened the throttle a notch, the great seventy-four inch drivers began to turn, and with quickly gathering speed, the Extra 395, as the train was called, pulled down the yard and out across the Mississippi for Chicago.

Forty minutes later, Ashton, fifty-four miles east of Clinton, reported Extra 395 stalled on the main line with a disabled engine. It was a serious matter for the Galena Division, since the Special was a very important train, and one which could brook no delays. With lightning speed another engine was brought from the roundhouse to be sent to pull the train into Chicago. Doran at once volunteered to run the relief engine from Clinton to Ashton. Ellison, our Superintendent, a railroader of the old school, and a man of unequalled capacity, hesitated a moment before granting permission. Finally, however, he said the word, and Doran mounted to the cab. They had given him no orders save the one, "Hurry!"

A mile and a half west of Ashton, the flagman of Extra 395 flagged the relief engine. As soon as he saw the flagman, Doran reached for the whistle cord, and with two sharp blasts acknowledged the danger signals. Then his hand returned to the throttle as if to shut off. But there, motionless, on the open throttle it remained, making no effort to halt the speeding engine. Doran himself sat bolt upright, staring straight at the spot, now less than a mile away, where the last car of Extra 395 stood on the same track along which his engine was racing.

At eighty miles an hour a mile is covered in a very short time. Half of the distance was covered before Doran's fireman realized the danger. Suddenly with an oath he sprang toward the throttle and the air; but he was too late. Then came the crash.

Not a man in the party aboard the Extra lived. Their lives, and those of the two men aboard the relief engine, were snuffed out before rescue could be effected. A day later, the wrecking outfit pulled away the last of the great pieces of steel which buried the engine. There, practically undamaged, in the heart of the wreck, was the cab of Doran's engine. Bolt upright, still sitting, they found the old engineer, his hand still resting on the opened throttle.

Now I put to you the question which never has been, and never can be answered. When did Doran pass from the realm of the living to that of the dead? There are those who sneer at such a question, and say that he died in the crash of the wreck. Yet he was found without bodily injury.

There are others who believe that he died in the speeding cab, before the wreck occurred—died with his steel grip on the open throttle, and his eyes on the track ahead. And so, they say, the just God in whom he had lost faith did finally avenge the man for the wrong he had suffered at the hands of those whom his engine cut off in the prime of life.

Revenge, or retribution? Who knows?

Freshmen All

(Apologies to Whittier)

By HAZEL DANIELS, '26

Blessings on you, freshmen all,
Precious lambs so young and small,
Shyly flitting to and fro,
Never knowing where to go,
Fearful lest you cross the path
Of seniors, and arouse their wrath;
Worried, lest you shrink so far
That no one will know where you are;
From my heart I pity you—
I was once a freshman, too.
Little frosh, have you no place?
Can't you come and join the race?
Clubs (except a few) decline
To let you have a chance to shine.
"Trap" staff makes no room for you,
Spotlight overlooks you, too.
There, there, freshies, don't you cry—
You'll be seniors, bye and bye.

Patience, then, and time will bring
Changes great and comforting:—
All your shyness will have fled;
Confidence will reign instead.
Firmly will your footsteps fall,
Echoing from hall to hall;
Loudly they will seem to say—
"Freshmen, one and all, make way!
Take your toys along with you;
Seniors have big things to do!
Clubs must have our genius there;
Tabula demands its share;
Spotlight waits a chance to throw
Upon our heads her rosy glow.
Therefore, clear the way with haste!
Seniors have no time to waste!"
Frosh will bow and scrape the floor;
Now, isn't that worth waiting for?

Optimism

By ELINOR HUTCHINSON, '26

LEILA tucked the last, perfect brownie into the cake-box and put on the cover. There, that was done, and this time she'd put the box where Madge couldn't find it. She'd better open the window, too, to get the chocolate smell out of the kitchen or Madge would know what she had been doing the minute she came in from school. Although there was much yet to be done, Leila stood at the open window, her elbows on the narrow sill. It was a perfect day, so appropriate for Richard, somehow. He was coming tonight—really coming after ten years' absence. Ten years! It seemed ten centuries ago that he had gone away. She vividly remembered the last night. He had vowed that he'd never forget, but until he could come back, and ask her to marry him, he wouldn't even write. Perhaps someone else would come along and he wanted her to feel free. But if not, well—he'd surely come back. Soon after he left, her mother had died, and Leila had had to leave school, and keep house for her father and Madge and Roger. She hated it. It was washing and scrubbing, dusting, ironing, and dishes all the time. Madge never had time to help; she was never home long enough, and certainly Roger didn't lighten her burden—made it heavier if anything. Now Leila smiled a little bitterly as she thought how Richard had wanted her to feel free if anyone else came along. Anyone else! How ironical! What chance did she have to even see anyone else, cooped up all day long in the house as she was, slaving for an unappreciative family, and losing her youth? Yes, losing her youth—she was twenty-eight, and certainly looked it.

Well, why shouldn't she?

Abruptly she left the window and crossed to the old blurry mirror hanging over the kitchen sink. Perhaps Rich wouldn't like her so old. Well, he couldn't expect her to be the same after ten years of drudgery. Would he still be the same tall, slim, jolly, good-looking Rich? Probably. Men didn't change as much as women did. Anyway, tonight they would sit on the porch. She could manage to be in the shadow of the old columbine vine, and there he wouldn't be able to see her very well. Perhaps, too, when Madge came home from school, she'd help a little with the dinner and straighten up so she could finish that light blue dress she was making over. Blue was becoming and would take away some of the lines around her eyes. There wasn't so very much more to do on it. She could easily finish it in half an hour.

The front door slammed, and Leila turned quickly away from the mirror just as Madge came into the kitchen. For the fiftieth time, Leila felt a sudden admiration for that piquant, dark, beautiful face—admiration mixed with envy. It wasn't fair that Madge should have all the good looks, and go to school and have pretty clothes, and dates all the time.

"Hello, Lee. Anything to eat? I'm starved!" She looked so sweet and appealing somehow that for a minute Lee was tempted to bring forth the precious brownies. No! They were for Richard. She decided not to even tell Madge about Richard until later. Perhaps he would be fat or bald.

"Look in the ice-box, Madge. There's a piece of pie and some milk and some cold meat. Don't take much of the meat, though. I need it for supper." She hesitated a moment. Then, "Madge can you help me a little with supper so I can finish that blue dress?"

Madge looked up from the pie. "What's the big rush about the dress all of a sudden. Gotta date?" Without waiting for an answer she went on. "Sorry I'm due at the hairdresser's in half an hour, and I've got to wash my hair."

Quick tears sprang to Lee's eyes. She turned her head away. Madge continued, "You're awfully slow with that dress, Lee."

"Slow? Madge! Do you think I ever have time to sew?"

"Well, why not? You're home all day."

For a minute there was silence in the little room. Lee was biting her lip to keep back an angry reply. Then she smiled a little, thinking of Richard.

"I might get married some day, Madge, and then maybe you'll see how much there is to do around the house."

Madge laughed. "Don't kid yourself, dearie. You haven't got a chance! Well, I've got to tear," and she ran upstairs, singing.

Left alone in the kitchen, Leila stood staring at the old stove. What a perfect little cat Madge was! Didn't she realize that a person had feelings? She slammed the door savagely to shut out Madge's song. She might have known she wouldn't help her, and now she'd have to wear her old dark dress. Tears were very near the surface as she began to peel the potatoes for supper.

It was eight o'clock. Lee hung up the last dish towel, and went upstairs. She'd have to hurry. Rich would come at eight-thirty. She felt suddenly tired. It was so warm, and it had seemed as if there were no end to the dishes.

Of course, Madge had had a date and didn't have time to help. Madge never did.

In the stuffy, hot, little bedroom, Lee slipped out of her old faded dress, and hurried to the bathroom. As she bathed, she again felt that curious little thrill of expectancy. Thank goodness, father had to work tonight, and the kids were both out! Otherwise they would all congregate on the porch, and the precious hour which Richard was spending with her, between trains, would be a family affair. Just an hour—but then anything and everything might happen in an hour. As she brushed her long, wavy hair she suddenly smiled. Perhaps, the next time she came into this room, she would be engaged, and then wouldn't Madge be surprised? As she adjusted her cuffs, she heard a sound which made her heart thump. Richard had remembered their old whistle! She ran to the window and looked out. He was just the same—the same old Rich. Her family never would have believed that plain, substantial old Leila could ever have looked so young and lovely and rosy.

She ran downstairs and out onto the porch.

"Lee! Gee, it's mighty nice to see you." He took both her hands in his.

"Rich—you child—you haven't changed a bit!"

So casual, as if they had seen each other last week, she thought. But then, perhaps he was trying to be calm and casual. They sat down, then, in the porch swing and talked about themselves and each other and Richard's work, and the many times that they had sat in the old swing before. What a perfect night it was, Leila thought. Starry, moonlight, quiet except for the crickets' monotonous song; warm! A night for youth. She brought her thoughts back to the old creaky swing. Rich was saying something. She must listen to every word. The time was short.

"I didn't know whether I'd find you or not," he said laughingly. "Thought perhaps you'd be married and gone and I'd never see you again."

Lee looked up at him with a mischievous twinkle in her eyes. "Oh, no, Rich. You said you'd come back, you know, so I've waited."

Instead of the reassuring retort that she expected, there was an appalling silence. Then, "Good heavens, Lee, you didn't—you don't mean to say you took that seriously?"

"Why—of course, Rich. Didn't you?"

"Well, we were such kids, and I thought, well, I—the fact is—oh—Lee, I'm an awful cad, but—oh, hang it—I've been married five years. I never dreamed you'd wait. I thought—"

She forced a laugh. "It's all right, Rich—I—understand." If he said a word about his wife, she'd scream! "By the way," she said in what she hoped was her natural voice, "Your train leaves in ten minutes."

"Yes, I must go. Good-bye, Lee. It's been no end of good to see you." He went down the steps. She turned and went slowly into the house. Once in the dark hall, she paused a moment, and put her hand to her throat. It felt funny. She didn't feel like crying either. Sort of dazed, as if—well, as if she'd been slapped. She moved on toward the kitchen. Just one thought was clear in her mind. She spoke aloud to the darkness.

"Madge will be hungry when she comes in. I'd better put those brownies where she can find them."

Queer Tamany

By HAZEL WIGGERS, '26

TAMANY sat on the edge of the cliff and fiddled, while the setting sun shone softly on his long, thin, silvery hair and bent back. A great distance below his dangling feet the white sand lay scattered with rocks, and beyond its narrow margin, the green-blue restless Atlantic. Sure, and Tamany was a queer, wee, old man, for who else should be fiddling away on the edge of the lonely cliff, when in the village the good folk from the peat bogs were at supper. As the sun slipped away into the soft grey mist of the horizon, his bow glided softly across the strings, and the clear quavering thread of melody hovered over the brink of the cliff, while two old folk treading softly far back on the highway, heard the eerily sweet sound and wondered if the will o' the wisp was singing over the water.

Old Tamany played softly to himself, and watched the wee stars creep out one by one, and his soul sang with the melody, quiveringly, in a whisper, as with the wind stealing through the reeds on a night of nights. Far off the misty village lights had winked out and the good folk had gone to bed, and to be sure they were good, for they gave him a jacket now and then, and a bite to eat. But they could not give him sympathy, for he was the queer, gentle, old Tamany who fiddled—and they would tap their heads when he could not see. It was much grander to be under the great dark sky with an invisible shore and the sea beneath your feet, but sure, it was a bit lonely too, and the fingers on the bow trembled a moment, and the melody sighed.

He might limp down into the village, where the older folk passed him by in their hurry, but the children would go slowly and when he stopped, would cluster around him with their sweet, dewy little faces, and bright eyes eagerly searching his, and their soft voices calling for a tale of their loved wee folk. And sure, once or twice a man had stopped and listened and left again slowly, for he knew that old Tamany had only his dreams left. But he did not know that to the wee old man, his dreams were real. When Tamany fiddled, the village folk would pause for the weird sweet melody of another tongue, but would soon call for their own tunes. Then Tamany would play these with his bow and fingers, but his heart would play the other melody, and the folk would look in his eyes and would know he was seeing sights unbeknown to them, and would pass on. It was whispered he had been a changeling, so some would shun him.

When the children were older, they, too, would forget and go on, though the wee children would still listen. They could understand, and Tamany would tell of one early clear dawn when each clump of brush had its twinkling rim of dew, and diamonds were underfoot and showered before him as he walked. The hours had bloomed during the still night to a thousand pink petals, and the flowers were like fallen stars, and the surf was thrumming far away, and sure, your heart would be singing with the wee birds hid up the mountain side. The mist had been rising slowly from the valleys on this dawn that he had trudged up the mountain, and he had heard a soft tapping which seemed louder as he came along, when there, suddenly under a shrub on the mountain side was a tiny leprechaun who was busy hammering at some fairy shoe; but sure, before Tamany could speak, he had slipped away.

Once in a small glen as he had limped slowly along playing softly and had come to a tiny silvery glade in the moonlight, there had been wee creatures playing, and he had stopped. They had begun to dance while he had fiddled softly for them until the moon had begun to fade, and they had flitted away nodding and smiling at him. On another such night he had passed a turf house where great sickness was and had seen the banshee coming. He had fiddled boldly on while the banshee had stopped, wavered slowly, and faded away in the darkness. And the little sick laddy in the house had lived.

There had been one night when he had played on the cliff, when the sea below had been black and shimmering silver, and out of the dim horizon had sailed a great full-rigged galleon. As it drew near, the waves seemed suddenly deeply heaving, as in a great storm, and there had been a noiseless bustle on board, and then suddenly the great ship sank, and all its hurrying figures and stately sails were covered with the black waters. And sure, Tamany had told the village folk, but they had only smiled and tapped their heads when he did not look. Indeed this was but one of his queer dreams—he had but played his soft music on the cliff, and the whispering surf had made him see this. They only knew that old Tamany, a queer fiddler among the Irish folk, had friends among the wee folk. They did not know that the sweet eerie music could fiddle down the great wall between the past and present, and the barrier between the real and unreal.

Tamany leaned his cheek on the smooth curve of his fiddle, and closed his eyes against the great blackness around him, but the void in his heart seemed much greater and darker. The clear note of the melody warbled and trilled like some belated lark, and then was hushed and sweetly wavering. Then Tamany fiddled softly but clearly, and listened. Soon he heard the whispering wings around him, and heard dim, silken, murmuring notes of laughter, but sure, he did not open his eyes, for the wee folk are soon startled away. The melody tinkled clear, and when he looked again, they had formed a ring and were dancing in the darkness, and Tamany could see their tiny smiling faces. Then as he watched, the ring parted and they were beckoning him in, and he moved toward the wee shining lights, but they were just beyond his reach, and he could not clasp their hands nor reach their friendly smiling circle. As he fiddled, the small lights danced faster and even the stars were whirling too, and all else was black. Then Tamany saw them beckon again, and where they were there was light, where they smiled their hearts were warm, and sure, the smiling friendly circle must not leave him and fade away, for again would come the great darkness and the stars would not dance. Old Tamany stretched out his hands to them, and his lonely heart smiled as their wee cool fingers clasped his and drew him into the shining circle.

* * * *

Early in the dawn, with the sea like rippling pearl, and the larks singing high above the great cliff, one of the village folk came down the narrow sandy shore and far along saw old Tamany, leaning against a rock, with his arm thrown back and bow in hand as though he was just starting to play. He was looking far away into the deep sky. As the dawn deepened, the villagers came softly, for they saw that old Tamany was to play no more. One small laddy picked up the fiddle, which strangely had not been broken, and stroked the bow on the strings, but it only gave a cracked, toneless sound. Then the Irish folk picked up the poor broken body, and the dark unbroken fiddle, and carried them high above on the cliff. Some of the good housewives wept because he had no one, and he was the lame, gentle, old Tamany.

But now on a night when the wind is whispering with the surf, and the sky is a great void with only tiny stars, the village folk tread softly along the highway and hear Tamany's sweet, quavering melody, soaring happily. And sure, if the mist is not too thick they may see a small bright, dancing ring, and the wee stars winking above.

Melodies

By MARGARET WILLIAMS, '26

I stood and listened as he played,
And heard the wondrous melodies
That rose and surged and almost made

The walls to quiver with the keys.

Sweet melodies, perfect in form,
Each note and chord, how true
they sound,

That painted peace, then fearful storm—

The room with music did resound.

But what, I thought, if he should fail
A key in harmony to sound?

Then silence with discord would wail.

Then would foundations fall to ground.

Of melodies, our life is made—

And we, like organists, must aim
To strike true notes that will not fade,
Immortal music to remain.

Farewell to the Class of '26

I SUPPOSE you Seniors get used to saying "Good-bye." It's good-bye to Drama, Burke, Forum, and Lincoln. You write your last article for the Tabula or "Trap"; watch your last football game; run in your last track meet. Then you shake hands with your teachers, yell "So long" to your classmates, and you're gone.

Maybe you get a little hardened to it after a while, but we underclassmen can't. You see you've always been a step ahead of us. But being that one step in advance, you've kept our heads turned the right way—forward. First we admit we were suspicious, then envious, but now we are proud of you! And haven't we a right to be? Look at your list of achievements. If I had more than half of this page, I would go along and name them. But that really wouldn't be necessary, for your loyal admirers know them by heart.

It seems so queer to think that next year, classes will be looking up to us. We're going to have to do our best to follow your examples and not disappoint them. If we do fail, it will be lack of effort on our part, and not your precedence. Wish us good luck for our fight, and we'll overwhelm you with the best wishes for the real struggle that you are facing—the one in which we know you'll be victorious.

Here's our hand and our hearts and an honest-to-goodness farewell to you, the class of 1926.

Thank You

WE are always willing to praise the editorial staff for the completed edition of the Tabula, but we seldom give the credit deserved to those whose names are not mentioned, yet who contribute materially to the Tabula in its premature stages.

There is nothing about the Tabula which creates so much interest and discussion as the apt quotation applied to each senior. But these sayings were discovered only after long searching. It is for the time thus spent that we wish to thank the Quotation Committee.

Another branch of our annual which adds so much variety and beauty is the art work. At the head of this is Mrs. Eckart who supervises all the work of the art department. We are proud of the fine illustrations and sketches exhibited in the Tabula, and we should be proud of the person who makes this possible.

We realize that the different tasks mentioned must be done, but there is one very important job which we scarcely know exists. That is the work undertaken and so successfully accomplished by Miss Riggs. Under her direction the typewriting classes type all the activity lists and quotations.

With the additional feature of a leather cover without any additional cost we should be doubly thankful to the business staff and its faculty adviser, Mr. Kitch. They have had to make up this extra expense by securing more advertisements—a trying but profitable task.

Now that you know those who are partly responsible for this year's Tabula, it's up to you to show that their work is appreciated.

AS the curtain falls upon the last act of our achievements in the last year, we Juniors feel that we have played our parts to the best of our ability. We have tried to make our bit in the episode of high school life something of which the school can always be proud. Have we failed? Why, how could a production under the direction of Mr. Bobbitt fail!

You have seen our representatives in the field of athletics. Just think, the honor of being captains of the baseball and track teams fell to two Juniors this year. We're partakers in every sport of the school.

We have not only played athletic roles, but have taken a good part in scholarship. The Junior Honor Roll has had between forty and fifty members during the year. One of our members actually received six AA's on her report card in March. Another has received all AA's for the year. There are many who have perfect AA records for single months.

Do you remember the Girls' Club show? Of course! Well, two Juniors had the lead in it.

So you see we have done a few things this year. Yet, the best has not been mentioned; that which was undoubtedly the prettiest scene on the whole stage of accomplishments—the Junior Prom.

The Prom stunt was unique, a regular musical comedy. In it we saw our own "Joke Park and Sliver Forest" Township High School under the supervision of the Seniors. We shall never forget the class in oratory, Art Abbott's history class, and Jimmie McCandless' class in love-making.

Tiny "Trapeases" were passed through the audience by news boys. These "Traps" contained the stunt program and news of "Joke Park High." The idea of a separate stunt program was an altogether new and novel one.

One of the features which made this year's Prom the success it was were the little green celluloid dance programs. The school shield in gold shown brilliantly on the cover, and the flower dances added a festivity and gayness never before attained by former Proms.

Howard Witt.....Cheer Leader

Behold the class of '28!
We like it well. At any rate,
It's "stood the gaff" of these two years
Without arousing undue fears.

We have not slept, our cheer is "neat";
Our Sophomore clubs are hard to beat.
On Honor Roll we've done our best,
But now we are not going to rest.

For we can see that jobs await
That need a group like '28.
And so, next year, our class will try
To be the best at Oak Park High.

What Glory, Freshmen?

AVIS DOWNEY, '29
CAROLYN MICHEL, '29

EXACTLY two hundred fifty-eight days, twenty-three hours, fifteen minutes, and six seconds ago, we preceded our shadows across the threshold of Oak Park High School and became one of the world's greenest group of freshmen. Five or six minutes had been spent before we had finally screwed up enough courage to enter, and glory be! We were not overwhelmed by the air of profound wisdom which we had expected! Indeed we felt much as the "Babes in the Woods" must have felt on realizing that they were lost. Loud were our lamentations when we found we must separate, but we remembered our grammar school teachers' last words, "Remember to behave in such a manner that glory will reflect on your school," and we behaved accordingly. With such a thought in our subconscious mind it is no wonder that we soon advanced in prominence.

After the first few frenzied days, we freshmen settled down to the regular routine of school life. We found our teachers and supervisors were always willing to help us out of the little difficulties that might beset a freshman. In fact, all year we have been impressed by the fact that our teachers are all so anxious and interested to help us succeed everywhere.

Only twelve of our number got on the honor roll the first month, but we are proud to say that at a later date we increased the number to forty-seven. We outdistanced the sophomores and juniors on the semester honor roll and came within five of reaching the mark set by the seniors.

Our time and minds were not entirely filled with virtuous thoughts of study. Indeed, no! We soon took advantage of the opportunity offered us to take part in the school clubs. The portals of the following clubs swung open at our call: Girls' Club, Science, Latin, Music,

French, Atalanta, and Brooks. Since most of these were departmental clubs, our best recommendations were good scholastic standings and a desire to belong. Though none of us belongs to all the clubs a consensus of our opinion would prove that they all serve delightful refreshments and provide interesting programs. Girls' Club has probably done more to make the girls feel as though they really belonged to Oak Park High and to help them make friends than any of the other clubs. The boys interested in athletics have tried hard for positions on sub and regular teams. Their labors will not go unrewarded. Oak Park's future athletic heroes are now in the making.

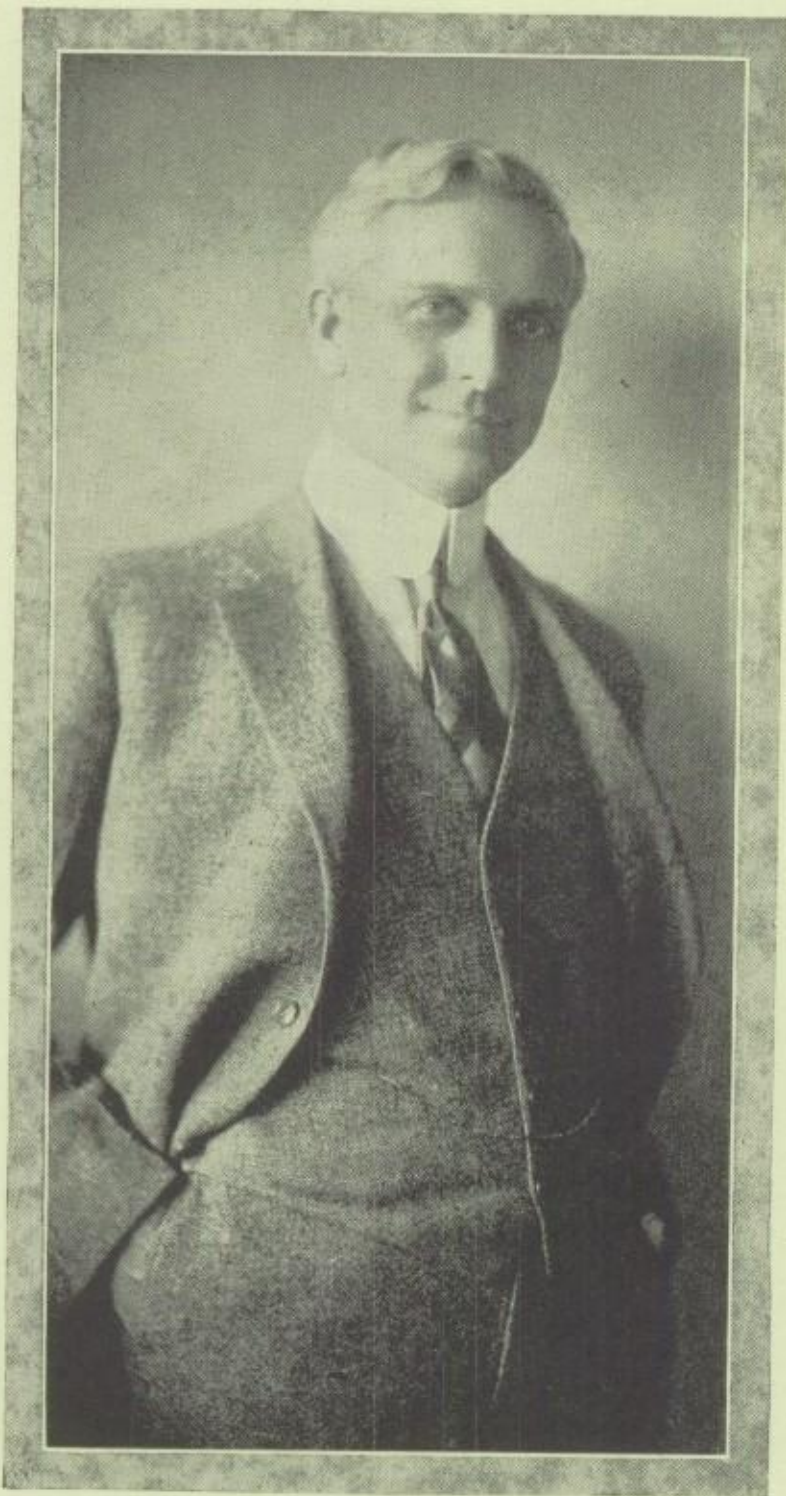

Charitably inclined people may be found among the great and simple classes alike so it is no great wonder that we freshmen did our bit to make the Near East Relief and Christmas Seal Drives successes.

Our freshman class wishes to maintain and carry on that spirit for which Oak Park has been famous in the past, and for which we hope she will be famous in the future, namely, that of an unselfish fighting spirit, working for the good of the school as well as the individual, the kind of spirit that is equally admired on the athletic field, the scholastic field, and among friends.

Time stays not in its flight. Soon we shall advance from the lowly rank of freshmen and become sophomores.

Our first year is past, and although we looked forward to it with alarm, we have found it a real delight, and we now look forward with great pleasure to our three remaining years. The seniors, on the other hand, must look with sorrowing eyes upon the passage of each fleeting hour which brings them closer to the parting of the ways.

PRINCIPAL M. R. McDANIEL

By MARGARET WILLIAMS, '26

"E DUCATION is a social matter as well as an individual matter," began our principal in his message to the class of '26. "From the earliest times men's interests have conflicted. The first generation of boys were not 'Abel' to get along with each other. Ever since that time it has been necessary for people to learn to get along together. That is one of the chief purposes of education as the great educators of today see it.

This purpose is accomplished in the class room but to a greater degree in outside activities. Like the average American, students are ready to take sides on any question even if they do not understand it thoroughly. We, therefore, must learn to be tolerant of the one who takes the other side. In our debating clubs—Forum, Lincoln and Burke—the members learn to take sides and oppose each other. However, in the face of opposition they learn to differ with a smile. That is one of the finest benefits derived from our clubs. Athletics is another activity in which we learn to 'hit the line hard;' but the best lesson we learn is to be true sportsmen, to be able to lose the game, but never our smile or our courage. This spirit of win if you can, but smile if you lose has enabled the class of '26 to do many things."

Mr. McDaniel then mentioned a few things that the class has done. The Tabula is one of the achievements which has been made possible by this spirit of co-operation. Also the Trapeze was published each week by a group of students who have learned to work together. In the elections the class has shown an unusually fine spirit. There was rivalry—but it was friendly rivalry. On the evening of April 3, 1925 the class presented a prom that was heralded a success by the whole school. This prom was a result of the splendid co-operation of the whole class.

The senior class play is always a big undertaking. When the tryouts are held, there is much rivalry. The real test of any class comes when the final results are announced. Is the class ever dissatisfied? No. The losers are always the first to congratulate the victors. This is real education. The students have learned to appreciate the good of working together to best promote the undertakings of the class.

"A man may be educated in books, but unless he has learned to get along well with his fellow man, whether he win or lose, he is not really educated.

'When the one Great Scorer comes
To count against your name,
It counts not if you have won or lost,
But how you played the game.'

The Admirable Crichton

By EMILY STAFFORD, '27

SOMEWHERE back stage, someone flashed a signal to the waiting stage hand, and slowly the beautiful new curtain parted on the Senior Class Play of 1926. This production was the "Admirable Crichton," written by James Barrie, beloved of English authors. While this play lacks the fairy-like plot of "Peter Pan," or the quaint whimsicality of "A Kiss for Cinderella," it is representative of Barrie's best work, portraying his unusual sense of humor, his guarded irony, his technique in making an unhappy ending not unpleasant.

A play in itself is rather an inert affair. It takes the actors to bring it to life, to fill it with vitality, to give it the personal charm that it requires to send an audience away captivated. Of all the audiences hard to satisfy, the one composed of inquisitive school acquaintances, and the second cousins or maiden aunt who have been induced to come and see their relatives present the mob scene is the worst. Surely, when spectators of this critical and unfeeling kind leave the assembly hall murmuring, "You'd never think she could do it, if you heard her recite Latin," or "Oh, yes, he's my brother James' sister-in-law's boy," then we know we have heard true praise for actors that have fulfilled their parts.

Crichton as presented by William Hales was a marked contrast to the portrayal of Eugene Kinderman. The former was the impeccable butler, the proud, aloof, ever-correct, ever dignified and respectful servant, whose sense of duty would not allow him to let his master go away unattended even if it did mean lowering his position to that of valet to assist him. Eugene Kinderman, while not quite the haughty person of the first act that William was, displayed true regal qualities on the island. His very presence as he strode about in his leopard skin robe was commanding. Always the master, always the leader, yet always he was the gentle and sympathetic guide. Barrie would have enjoyed seeing the two interpretations of this unusual character.

The part of the heroine was played with the greatest charm and ease. From the disdainful Lady Mary of the first act to the light-hearted Polly of the next two, was a change easily portrayed by Bereniece Rapp.

Albert Adams as Lord Loam was a delightful old fellow, a real catch for any correspondence school that taught a memory course. His transformation from the pompous English earl to the handy man that plucked chickens and played an accordion with a sorry tune, was a most absorbing study.

The only character whose life seemed unchanged by the series of events was Ernest, Lord Loam's nephew. This part was well taken by Stearns Ford. Treherne, the earnest, straight-forward, youthful reverend was, though not a prominent part, ideally played by Lloyd McBride.

Colton Storm as Lord Brocklehurst was the perfect monacle-swinging mother's darling. He was the English gentleman to the nth degree, and the laughter he provoked on the stage was echoed by the pleased audience.

The characters Catherine and Agatha, the two spiteful little sisters of Lady Mary, were well presented by Eleanor Scully and Jeanette Morris, Margaret Palmer and Virginia Trowbridge. Their interpretations, while different, were extremely natural.

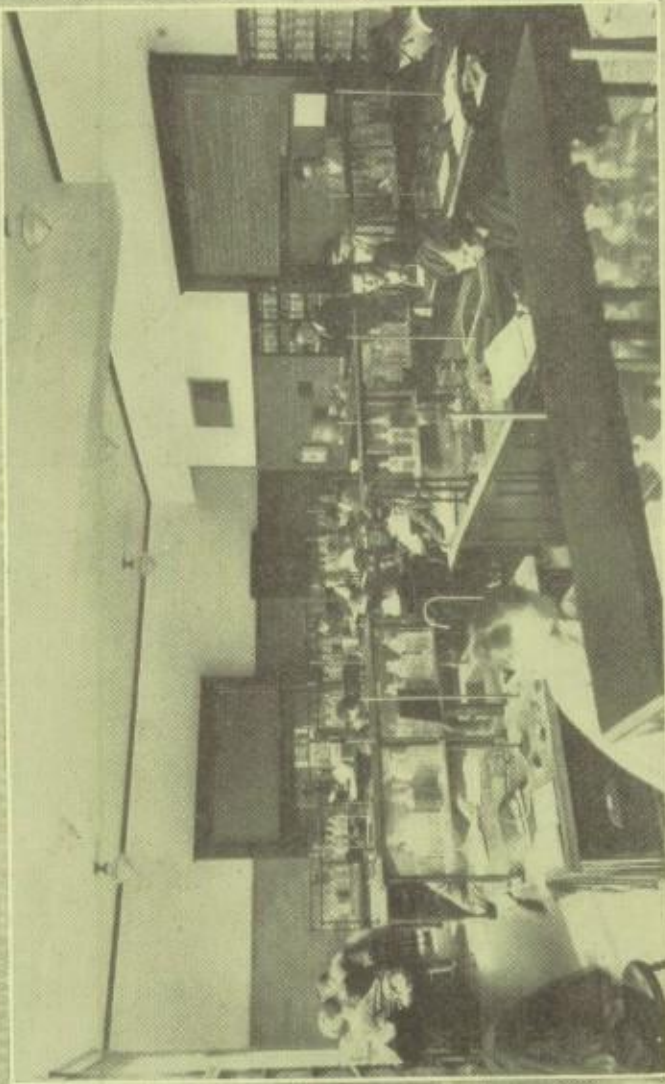

Certainly the servants as they came to the tea party in the first act were admirable. The embarrassed housekeeper, the self-conscious maids, the clumsy footmen and pages, the rotund cook, the impetuous bellboy, and the ill-matched Odds and Ends—all were as funny as they could be. Most important of the lower servants was the chubby Tweeny, presented by Jeanne Godolphin. This is the part of a warm-hearted, impulsive little scamp of an Irish maid that talked back to her superiors with a distracting brogue. Jeanne threw herself into her part with all her heart, so that her portrayal was all that could be desired.

Certainly the imperious Lady Brocklehurst is not to be neglected. Here Mary Michel and Betty Miller share honors. Both girls played the part of the elegantly suspicious mother with the greatest ease imaginable.

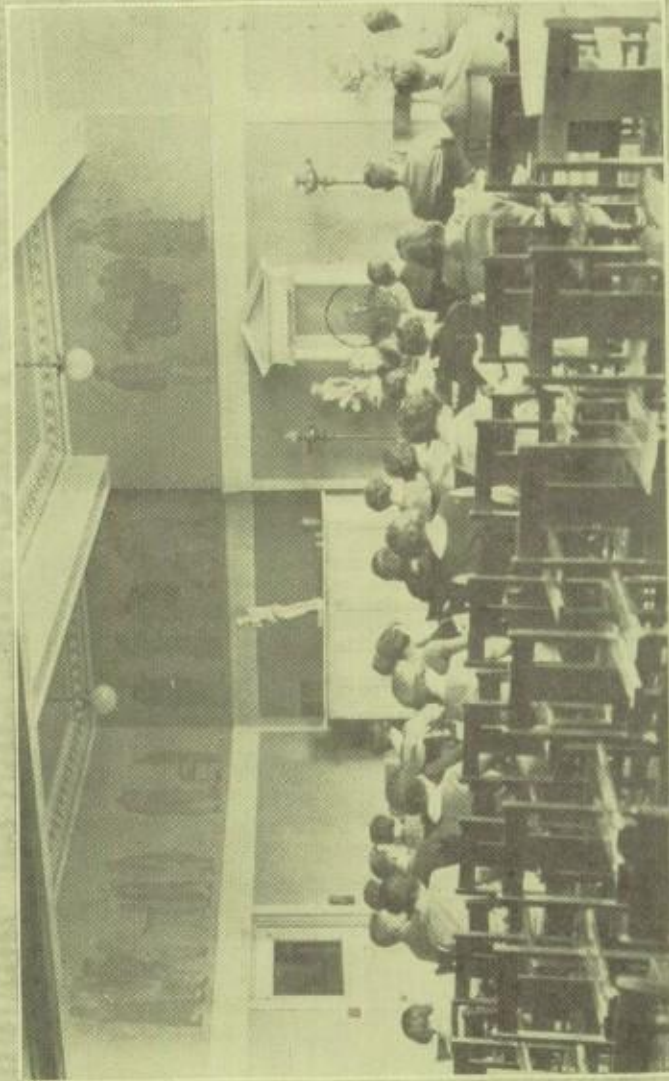

Another phase of the play was the imaginary dress ball that took place in the third act. It was just the kind Tweeny had always dreamed of—the stately minuet—the graceful classic—the interpretive and foreign dances.

The welding of this crude mass of well-meaning characters into a perfectly working unit seems to have been a fitting task for a good sized Irish policeman, but, of course, it is little Miss Payne to whom the honor goes. And who will deny that it was through her supervision and efforts that the play was the polished production that it was?

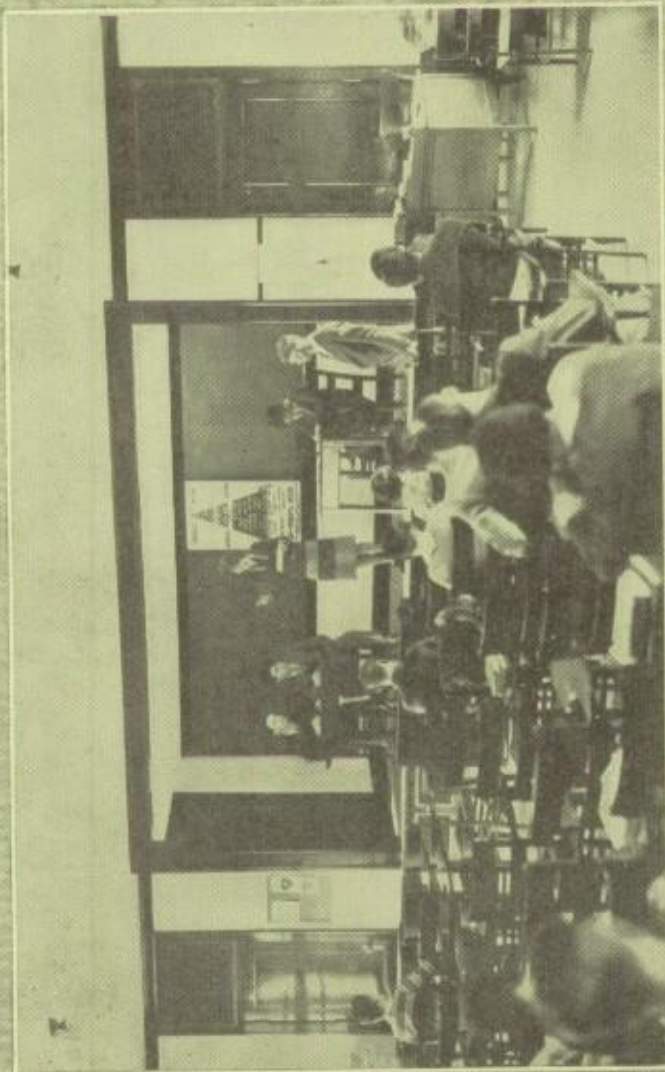

So, seniors, you have added another triumph to your already long list of victories. The school has recognized and will remember your ability, your perseverance, your very hearty co-operation, and now unaffectedly praises you. Surely in the vault where we hoard our recollections of your class, the memory of the "Admirable Crichton" will always remain a sparkling jewel.

The King and Queen of Clubs

By STANLEY HIPPI, '26

A maid to Oak Park High School came
In search of knowledge, fun, and fame.

A youth approached these portals, too,
Though not so willingly, 'tis true.

They settled down as though to stay,
And waste four precious years away.

In Science Club these people met,
And I suppose they're meeting yet.
It seems he fell for her one day,
That's why he's broke; the man must pay.

In Latin Club and History
He sat with her, with him sat she,
But when they came to junior days
parting

They hit the

of the ways.

To Music Club she went along;
They let her in for just a song;
That girl could surely hold a note,
She treasured every one he wrote.

In Forum she was thought a find,
Because she always spoke her mind.
Her mind was fickle, but they knew
She had the proper forum, too.

In Camera Club he hung his cap;
He pictured it to be a snap.
But it developed otherwise;
It left its print, and now he sighs.

He didn't like the daylight bright,
So he became a Lincolnite,
And often he would thus orate,
"A fish I was to take de bait."

This pretty Forum maid one day, Her Lincoln fellow heard to say,
"Tonight we have our 'Tea for Two';
Please come with me; I'm asking you."

She went with him all right, all right,
Because she loved her Lincoln knight.

She joined the Story Club brigade
Because she was a pen-sive maid,
And though her fame as poet pales,
She had no peer at telling tales.

He once had been a butcher boy,
So Scribblers' welcomed him with joy.
A fine, full blooded chap was he,
A Scribbler, born and bred, you see.

These two clubs met in joint affray,
And Scribblers' blood was up that day.
That night they counted fourteen dead;
The blood be on the Scribbler's head.

In Drama Club it soon was scene
At acting that she was the queen;
By stages thus she rose to fame
Because she was a play-ful dame.

In Golf Club to the fore he came
But found it was a bally game;
He said, "This stuff is pie for me,"
And then he sliced and wrecked the tee.

Four years had swiftly sped away,
And so when these two met one day
A salt tear stood in each one's eye
As each to each they said good-bye.

Each sadly breathed one parting breath
And muttered, "We've been clubbed to death."

WITH added specialties of printed programs, the Burke Debaters, and individual posters, and new parliamentary chart, Burke Club held up the standards created in former years.

The first two meetings were on organization and the next two were strictly private, but from then on each meeting was conducted with some special idea in mind. On Athletic Night, only athletic subjects were dealt with. On Lawyers' Night two well-known Oak Park lawyers expounded on "Arbitration as a Settlement for Coal Strikes." On Junior Night, the new members displayed their talent to the Seniors in a winning manner. The club then entertained the parents, and at the following meeting they met jointly with the girls' debating club, Forum.

The last three meetings, Burke-Lincoln-Faculty, Cup, and Senior Farewell, assured each member that the club had attained every goal that it had set up at the first two meetings on organization.

FROM the first meeting in October when the Forumites elected their officers, to the grand climax which came with the Mothers' Meeting, Forum has been a success.

Varied programs have kept enthusiasm at a high pitch. The young debaters have attacked world problems with statesman-like gravity and conviction. They have played at running the United States Senate even down to the General Charles G. Dawes informalities. Christmas time brought them a real live Santa Claus who had presents for all, because Forum helped Girls' Club give gifts to Chicago's poor. To show the fellows how well girls do things, a Burke-Forum meeting was planned and carried out. April 27 the club membership was swelled by the admission of eighteen new Forumites who duly showed their appreciation of the honor by conducting a Junior Meeting in the brief span of two weeks.

As the Forum president, Ellen Spelman, has said, they have:

Faithfulness
Open mindedness
Readiness
Unity
Mental alertness
Initiative
Thoughtfulness
Enthusiasm

To Miss Florence Brubaker the Forum girls wish to dedicate this page of the "Tabula" for her constant help in making the club what it is.

THIS year, as has been the case every year since its inception, Lincoln Club introduced several new ideas. These took various forms and assumed various degrees of solidity in fact. Perhaps the most material and substantial innovations were the new silver loving cups to be awarded at the end of the year to the best parliamentarian and orator, respectively. The Parliamentary Law Cup was presented by Mr. Williams of the Class of '25. At the final meeting the cups were awarded as follows:

Debating Cup—Lloyd McBride.
Extemporaneous Speaking Cup—William Stewart.

Parliamentary Law Cup—Lloyd McBride.
Oratory Cup—DeLisle Crawford.

In addition to these tangible evidences of success and advance, Lincoln Club feels, and believes that outsiders feel, that there has been a marked advance over previous years in the quality of the programs presented and the general spirit of the members both during the actual meeting and in the time spent preparing for the meetings.

UNDER the able leadership of Miss Bennett, Girls' Club has brought another year of its activities to a successful close. Its success is due largely to the fine spirit and hearty co-operation of the council and to the interest of the girls throughout the school.

The usual football dance and the Girls' Club show were given with great success. The Christmas stocking drive was carried out in a way very different from former years; $555.17 was raised and distributed through the settlements of Chicago. Three hundred and fifty stockings were made and filled by special committees. Christmas charity, Red Cross and personal service were the phases of work accomplished by the Welfare Committee. All newcomers were given a chance to make friends through the friendship parties, held twice a month, and planned by the Friendship Committee with Miss Wright as adviser. The Costume Committee deserves great credit for its work in furnishing costumes and make-up for various stunts and plays.

This year Girls' Club has presented unusually varied and attractive programs. Such speakers as Mrs. Gilkey and Mrs. Fairbank furnished educational meetings. For musical programs we procured Margaret Farr and Harriet Krauth, while some of the meetings were conducted entirely by our senior girls. Then, too, there were the stunts and meetings given merely for entertainment. Something new was introduced—our cheer leaders, who added pep and spirit to our meetings.

So, Juniors, may the best of luck and all good wishes follow you next year.

AT night when you are in your bed and resting from a day of toil, the Scribbler rakes his weary head and starts to burn the midnight oil. His lamp flares up beside his cot and brightly glows throughout the night; that's why his stuff is labelled "hot," and why the critics call it "light." The Scribbler combs his wavy hair and lets it flower at will; this gives him plenty more to tear and also cuts his barber bill. The Scribbler's heart with fervor burns to play a ditty on his lyre, but always in the end he learns he'll never set the world on fire. He longs to write some matchless tale and win at least some local fame, but people always call it "stale" and make him hang his head in shame. He then essays to write some verse, and thereto plies his willing pen, but all he gets are cries of "Worse," and so he hangs his head again. He woos the vain and fickle Muse, but never seems to find her home, and so he mutters "What's the use?" and wildly beats upon his dome. "Miss Muse, you are a fickle jade," he says at last, "I'm through with you," and finds himself a mortal maid and gets his inspiration, too.

In Scribblers' Club he sits around and reads his stuff from time to time, while critics fill the air with sound, and scribes read minutes writ in rhyme. At Scribblers' Club on Tuesday nights, that is, on each alternate week, he meets the literary lights of whom we feel constrained to speak. These Scribblers wield a wicked pen and make the ink quite freely flow; they are the choicest gifted men of all the humans here below. By writing tales of dripping gore, they've clambered up the hill of fame, and they expect to write some more and win an even greater name.

DRAMA CLUB, with the purpose to further dramatic interest and ability, received into its membership actors, dancers, singers, playwrights, electricians, and stage hands. This year there was such an unusual amount of talent exhibited in these lines that the membership had to be increased to one hundred active members and twenty associate members. The meetings did not lack enthusiasm and polish and such material. Practically every active member contributed in some way to the meetings. The programs usually consisted of two short plays and a talk bearing on something connected with drama. An unusually fine group of original plays were presented this year. Such one-act plays as "Romances" by Rostand, "The Lost Silk Hat" by Dunsany, and "Proposals Under Difficulties" by Bangs, were given.

Moreover, this year Drama Club put on "Come Out of the Kitchen," by A. E. Thomas, for the Girls' Club Show. This was a splendid success and brought great honor to the club. Another feature of Drama Club is its theatre party. The club witnessed "The Miracle" and thus furthered its dramatic interest. The club was also responsible for the half hour of laughter at the Senior Assembly program at which "The Trysting Place," by Booth Tarkington, was presented.

Drama Club has won its place in the first rank among the clubs of the high school. It has run smoothly under the superior presidency of William Hales. As in "The Admirable Crichton," Bill has always been "determined to play the game." Admiration is due to this president for his staunch and unfailing support of the club. Although Drama Club has possessed many leaders of the school, it owes its polish to Miss Payne. Through this fine woman, full of sympathy and interest in every member's thoughts and actions, the club has gained its remarkable success.

Mathematics Club

John Munday	Treasurer

Miss Newlon	Faculty Adviser

A GAIN Math Club closes an eventful year with each member feeling that it has reached and attained the standard set by former Math Club members. Due to the co-operation and enthusiasm of the members the meetings have been intensively interesting and enjoyable.

The programs have varied so that the meetings have been looked forward to with vigor and zest which is necessary for the success of any club. All phases of "The Ancient Number System" have been discussed in detail. "Interesting Facts About Numbers," "Stories of Long Ago," "Where Uncle Sam Gets the Money We Use" and "Dates" were just a few of the interesting subjects discussed.

The club this year was fortunate in having Miss Inks of the mathematics department give a most interesting and beneficial talk on "The Relation of Mathematics to Ethics." With the assistance of slides she showed how mathematics is related to nature, art and architecture. Who ever would think Leonardo De Vinci in his famous painting employed the principle of extreme and mean ratio? Miss Inks proved this conclusively.

An unusual meeting of Mathematics Club was a meeting attended by teachers of the mathematics department. A very cleverly written stunt in which the faculty played the leading roles was presented by some of the members.

Games and entertainment of various sorts helped a great deal in making the meeting a success, leaving members in a happy and contented frame of mind for their journey to the lunchroom.

The success of Mathematics Club this year is due to the hard work and splendid interest shown by the faculty adviser, Miss Newlon, the earnest efforts of the president, William Stewart, and the fine co-operation of the committees.

OFFICERS

NEWTON Club has had a fine year in its activities, and it has made a distinct advance in its programs.

Among the main events of the year were discussions on various mathematical subjects, a debate, an illustrated lecture on the development of the Hindu-Arabic number system, a lecture on logarithms, the fourth dimension, a Christmas party, and a mathematical play.

One of the talks was on the method for determining the value of Pi. The Archimedean method, the modes employed during the middle ages, and the more modern methods and results were presented. "Logarithms" was another subject. It was shown how logarithms were discovered, developed, tabulated, and most important of all, how they are used. This discussion had as one feature the slide rule—an outgrowth of the logarithmic principle.

The main contention in the debate was that the metric system was more convenient and better adapted to use than the British system.

Then, as the biggest event of the year, Newton Club presented a play called "Flatland" (from the book of that name), depicting life in one plane. The play was presented by the entire membership of the club before Mathematics Club. Immediately after there was presented a one-act sketch, "The Great Proposition."

A study of life in one plane lead on to a study of four dimensions, and Mrs. Johnson of the faculty ably and delightfully presented the subject.

This concluded the main events of the year, and the writer closes with the presentation of the officers' thanks to the members for the privilege conferred on them of serving the club during the year.

THE Student Council, originated in 1923, is a group of students whose purpose is to help in school affairs, subject to the help of students. The members, representing the different classes, are chosen in various ways, some being appointed by certain faculty members, and others elected from a certain list, by the students.

Although the council does not stand out particularly, the fact that there is one, makes the student body realize that Oak Park High has some student government. Besides, as this institution gets older and more established, undoubtedly, it will accomplish more. This year the Valentine Day and Bundle Day Drives for the Near East, which were formerly under the direction of a teacher, were run entirely by the council and assisting students. In both cases the amount of money and clothing received seemed to rival other years, and the experience and responsibility was good for those in charge. The school co-operated whole-heartedly in the projects sponsored by the council, and this very attitude of the students seems to make the council worth while. Mr. McDaniel was always willing to help the council, but he also believed that it was better if some of the problems were solved by students alone.

SMOKING COUNCIL has had a very successful year. There have been very few violations of the rule which prohibits smoking by high school students within the two-block limit between the hours of eight and six.

That the school has responded nobly to the Council's plea for obedience to the rule is shown by the fact that this organization has had only a small amount of business. During the whole year several fellows were apprehended and blacklisted, a process which is distasteful to members of the Council as well as to the rule-breakers.

Yearly there has been a decided falling off in the number of infringements on the smoking rule, and, it is hoped, in the near future it will become a matter of honor to abide by the regulation, so that Smoking Council will have little or none of its unpleasant work.

This year's Smoking Council is composed of four Seniors and a like number of Juniors.

DURING the past year Music Club has sponsored six matinee recitals given by members of the club for their parents and friends. In former years tickets were issued for admission to the recitals, but these were done away with so that more people could be admitted, even though they knew no one in the club. The recitals were held once every month in the music hall and were really formal affairs, because printed programs were given out by ushers, and the stage was always decorated with lamps and flowers.

Beside the recitals Music Club also held one business meeting each month which was given over to all elections and necessary business. After such matters were taken care of, the rest of the meeting was turned over to the program committee. This year Lois Brooke was in charge, and with the help of her committee, certainly provided pleasing programs. Generally, someone talked on the life of some composer with illustrations given by members who had studied something by that composer. One interesting feature was provided by Irene Nolan when she shipped her harp to school and played several compositions. This delighted the club, because it was different from anything heard before. At several of the business meetings contests were held in which the one who could name certain composers, and their works received a prize.

Thus a successful year was brought to a close by the sixth and last matinee recital.

ANOTHER highly successful year of Story Club is in the past. One of the most pleasant experiences was to come out victorious in the hard-fought battle between Story Club and Scribblers.

With Margaret Williams presiding, the meetings were enthusiastic and pleasant. We are, however, sure that without Miss Wright's assistance and suggestions, Story Club could not have achieved the reputation which it now has.

And now to next year's club we leave the future of Story Club. May it always be bright and successful!

WITH much anticipation of another successful meeting, Art Club will close its doors on another eventful year.

Much of this year's success is due to the able efforts of Ruth Hartung, president, and our inspiring instructors, Mrs. Eckart and Miss Ely. Art Club enjoyed numerous trips this year as well as interesting meetings. Perhaps our most interesting trip was to Paul Trebilcock's studio downtown. Mr. Trebilcock easily shows us just what we Oak Parkers have to do to maintain a high standard.

Another interesting trip was to a bronze factory. Since this difficult and complicated task, namely, that of casting bronze figures and statues, has been operated before our eyes we can understand how lasting and permanent these landmarks are.

At one of our "stay-at-home" meetings we heard about some famous sculptors and cartoonists. The girls took special interest in these helping talks. We also enjoyed several games and guessing contests.

At another meeting we helped mount an exhibit which was going to Des Moines, Iowa. In spite of our hard work it gave us a great deal of satisfaction to know that it was completed successfully.

To join Art Club one must write a manuscript describing some painting or piece of sculpturing in our own high school. Also, there should be a short sketch about the artist or sculptor. This year quite a few members were taken in which shows that the girls and boys are interested in making this little club into a larger and better one.

Art Club is maintained to inspire the pupils to bigger and better things. It is to help the scholars to see the more beautiful side of life.

Le Cercle Français

Helen Kerr President
 Lois Irvine Secretary
 Robert Baumrucker Treasurer

THE meetings of Le Cercle Français, held during the past year were not only of the greatest interest to the members but were highly instructive as well.

Mlle. Favard's address on the difference between French and English diction was particularly delightful. The Christmas play, Pas Telephons, was most enjoyable. A most instructive as well as entertaining feature at one of the meetings was a test of the ingenuity as well as of the memory of the members of the club, by Miss Wise. Miss Wise put a single letter on the board, and the members tried to think of French words commencing with that particular letter. Then she wrote a French proverb on the board, gave the members a few seconds time to study it, erased it and tested the memory of the members by having them try to repeat the proverb.

At one meeting members of the club gave most interesting talks, illustrated with lantern slides on histories and public monuments of Paris, the Seine, the gardens of Luxembourg, the palace of Versailles, and other places of historic and popular interest in that city. The meeting was ended by an interesting talk on Beaucaire by Miss Maxwell.

Musical selections, vocal and instrumental, featured another meeting. French songs were rendered to the music of violins, the musicians being in colorful costumes of French peasantry. Miss Ward had charge of the program. She is new to the school and she has helped make this year a most successful year for Le Cercle Français.

The usual donation was sent to Marguerite Saintpierre, the French war orphan to whom the club is giving assistance. Marguerite wrote her thanks for the help given her and told of her progress in school.

A humorous play, La Poudre Aux Yeux, was the feature of the last meeting. The play has been read by the members at their regular classes. The performers were members of the club, and the performance was highly enjoyable.

The members of the club feel under deep obligations to Mme. Bluzat for her generous assistance to them in all their activities.

THE Hi-Y meetings have been generally marked by a large attendance, due in no small measure to the excellent speakers, who furnished an inspiration in thought and character to the members.

Mr. Winchell of the Y. M. C. A. gave unsparingly of his time and ability to make the administration the success that it was. The high school students heard Mr. Beck, head of the New York Stock Exchange, in one of the Friday assemblies. The high school had attempted to get Mr. Beck to speak on various occasions, and it was finally achieved through the efforts of Mr. Winchell.

The meetings were of a varied nature. Coaches' Night, when Coaches Winters, Ticktin, Foster, and Schroeder talked, was well received. Principal M. R. McDaniel and Mr.

Carson were two other speakers, whose talks were especially significant and noteworthy.

A banquet, under the auspices of Hi-Y Club was tendered to the Lansing and Oak Park football teams after their memorable gridiron duel.

Under the leadership of President Robert Lavicka, the discussion meetings were snappy and well conducted; some very good ideas of living and character were put before the members at these spirited discussions. The officers and various committees also carried out their work in an efficient manner.

Although Hi-Y Club worked under a handicap during the second semester, due to the closing of the activities, another year of advancement and progress has been added to the scroll of successful administrations.

THE annual Girls' Conference was held at the Grace Episcopal Church on November 6, 7, and 8 this year, under the adult leadership of Miss Sarah Shufelt and Miss Grace Chapin. Frances Hubbard and Mary Michel were elected President and Vice President respectively, and these two girls presided at the various meetings. The conference was fortunate this year in getting for its conference speaker, Mrs. Warren T. Powell, who, with other famous speakers, gave addresses on the conference theme, "The Open Road," the slogan, "Straight Ahead," and the hymn, "O Son of Man." A very lovely poem on the theme was written by Frances Stevens and chosen as the conference one. There were four main meetings, and the church was filled at each one, showing that the girls appreciate the opportunities they receive at these conferences of hearing inspiring speakers, including missionaries, ministers, famous men, and women, and high school girls. The final meeting was one to which the mothers were invited, and it was planned especially for them, with a separate meeting for mothers and daughters both, after the joint one.

A Carry-Over Committee, consisting of Marjorie Carr, chairman, Harriet Hobbins, Mary Louise Kettlestrings, Katherine McDaniel, and Grace Bickel was elected, and these girls were in charge of several meetings held later in the year. They, too, will make the plans for the 1926 conference.

THE doors have swung shut on another successful year of History Club. The meetings were varied and interesting and certainly enjoyed by all.

Election of officers took place the first meeting.

The following meeting consisted of an Armistice Day program, in which members and outside guests gave interesting talks on France and other subjects relating to Armistice Day.

At the December meeting a very interesting and amusing stunt typifying an Athenian court scene was presented. The cast consisted entirely of boys, who made the stunt very realistic, and needless to say, comical. At this meeting Viola Bower was elected Secretary of Publicity, which office is a new feature.

At the January meeting an Athenian wedding was presented by the members. This had been a great success when given two years before and, thanks to the coaching of Mr. Carson, was equally interesting this year. The club was particularly amused when the bride was drawn through the audience on a small wagon. This meeting concluded the first semester.

The first meeting of the second semester opened with several short games, followed by the election of officers.

No meetings were held in March, but the program for the April meeting quite made up for the month's absence. Mr. Carson gave a stirring account of the contrast between English and American justice. He recounted numerous trials he himself had witnessed and gave statistics proving how much more developed England's system of justice is than ours. There was complete silence after Mr. Carson finished speaking, which illustrates how much he impressed all who heard him.

Certainly without the aid of many other teachers of the history department History Club could not have been as complete a success as it was this year.

BROOKS Club has just completed its third and most successful year. Although our picture does not show it, our membership and attendance has been more than fifty. While the membership is open only to those taking Religious Education, it is not a religious organization, as supposed by many, but a club with a social purpose.

Our meetings included three outdoor gatherings; one at Thatcher's Woods, a treasure hunt to North Park, and a council fire at the Forest Preserve, discussion meetings, special speakers and one play. The play we gave was one of Kenneth Sawyer Goodman's, "Dust of the Road." Among our special speakers were Mr. John L. Alexander and Mr. Prescott G. Orwig. In our social hour we were entertained with clever stunts and games which not only made fun for all but helped us get acquainted. Then, the "eats" were always good and usually something "different."

Brooks Club has also done some charity work. At Thanksgiving we took baskets to needy families in Oak Park. We collected books for Mercy Center and School for Delinquent Boys.

To Miss Magowan and Mrs. Houser we owe much for our fine programs and many good times, and the success of the club has been greatly due to their work and leadership.

Radio Club

RADIO CLUB is one of the few clubs that is open to students of all classes. It was started in 1919 with a membership composed mostly of licensed amateur operators.

Until 1924 the club required each member to know the code. In 1924 the membership requirements were changed, and the activity of the club was broadened so as to make it possible for the students who were interested in radio, but not yet at all expert, to become members.

The members of the club who have their radio licenses have talked with England, Denmark, Italy, Brazil, Argentina, Panama Canal Zone, Mexico, and all of the United States and Canada. These same transmitters have been heard in such far-away corners of the world as South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and China.

Radio Club has charge of the school receiving set. It also has had charge of the set that furnished music for the skaters on the athletic field last winter. This set has now been loaned to the school for use in the assembly hall.

At the Lansing, Michigan, football game the amateur operators of radio club installed a complete transmitter and receiver using the call letters IDZF-1. The results of the game were transmitted to an ex-president of the club, who relayed them to Lansing through IBNA. Station EAYY received the news of the whole game play by play. The news traveled much faster than ordinary news dispatches would travel to the Lansing papers. Lansing knew of their only touchdown in less than five minutes after the play had been made.

At the school open house exhibit an amateur transmitter was in operation.

THE Camera Club completed another successful year of extensive service to the school. This has been attained through the persistent efforts of its members, and the systematic arrangement of committees. Another important reason for the club's huge success is the diligent supervision of our adviser, Mr. Lane, and also our true friend, Mr. Kelley. Much credit is due to the companionable supervision of these two men, and is appreciated by every member.

This year the club has had the unusual pleasure of being the first one to dedicate the school's new photographic room. The club has already shown the worth of this wonderful room by its great service this year along the lines of photography. Individual pictures of every student in high school were taken, to be used for identification purposes in the office. Class play pictures were photographed and put on sale to the advantage of the students. Also many other serviceable jobs were performed with success.

The members have had many helpful speakers and trips during this period of club activity and have carried the club to a height of usefulness never before attained. It is predicted that the next year of club activity will be of great importance, and will carry on the club's high standard.

THE Girls' Camera Club, having rounded out its fourth year, feels that it is now entitled to take its place with other important high school clubs. Some of the features of the year's activities were highly instructive, while in others the entertainment features predominated.

Among the former may be mentioned: a descriptive talk by Mr. Crawford on the mountain region of Wyoming; "The Chemistry of Photography," an address by Mr. Osborne; a description illustrated with photographs of a journey through the South by Mr. Schantz; a sight-seeing tour of the studio of the Atlas Film Company, where the processes of taking moving pictures were fully explained; and a joint meeting with Boys' Camera Club, the members of which explained the method of enlarging pictures.

The entertainment features included a trip to the dunes with luncheon prepared by the girls; the mothers' meeting, with its interesting little play given by a number of the girls; and a hike to the woods with a picnic supper prepared in the open.

All of these activities were under the watchful care of Miss Anthony, to whom full credit must be given for a very successful club year.

MANY hours have been spent by the Photographic Staff in making the high grade pictures that appear in this Tabula. Only the co-operation and hard work of the nine boys comprising the committee could have made this possible. Even when the group pictures were made, and everyone seemed to feel a great urge to move around as soon as they were in front of the camera, the patient staff, with the vision of this completed Tabula before them, kept steadily and patiently at work. The task of the staff has been harder than ever this year, for the suspension of school activities piled up all the work into a much shorter period.

The boys who gave their time to the school for this work are: the photographer, Bruce Neil, invaluable not only as a photographer, but also because his visage is responsible for the smiles on the faces of the students in the pictures; Arthur Riddiford, head of the staff, who did the freak pictures; Kenneth Banthin and Edwin Komarek, who burned the midnight oil doing the developing and printing; Raymond Coudret, staff artist; and Eugene Thompson, understudy to the photographer and general handyman. Even the industry of the staff might not have produced the present results had it not been for the supervision and co-operation of Mr. Kelley and Mr. Lane, who faced many difficulties in the taking of the pictures, but who, thanks to an efficiently equipped dark room, have made a complete success of the work.

COMMERCIAL CLUB is enjoying its second year of interesting work. It was organized on October 7, 1924. The membership consists of those who are taking commercial subjects and maintain an average of B, in accordance with the by-laws.

The club has had many interesting programs. Among these was a trip through the Oak Park Bell Telephone Company, and the annual typing contest which is sponsored by the club.

The purpose of the club is to promote interest and enthusiasm among the students who are taking commercial subjects, and to establish friendly relations between the business men of our community and the commercial students. The club is under the able leadership of Mr. Seymour, faculty adviser.

Commercial Club has high ideals and is working to become a center for the commercial department activities. Students who are interested in the commercial work should join this club, because they will derive many benefits.

IN March, 1923, a group of geography students organized a club to stimulate interest in all phases of geography and also promote friendship.

Now, at the age of three, we can see some things that have been accomplished. In addition to regular meetings, Saturday excursions are made through Chicago's leading industries. Attractive posters and cartoons adorn our bulletin board. The trophy gavel perpetuates a tradition. We have learned that democracy pays in club enthusiasm, since instead of having a few do a great deal, we aim to have every one do a little. This is accomplished by having officer and committee personnel change each semester, and by having many short talks at each meeting. We are leaving a scrap book of ideas for posters and a subscription to "Travel." We leave you, our successors, to carry on. See you in October!

UNDER the supervision of Mr. Kelley, Botany Club lost no time in beginning the season's activities.

The first program meeting was held at Garfield Conservatory. Here, Mr. Weber, assistant superintendent, guided the members through the propagation houses and explained the methods of propagation as practiced there.

Like other clubs, Botany Club's activities were stopped by the thirty-day ban. Following the lifting of the ban Botany Club held its second meeting. Mr. Shanty, for many years connected with the school, entertained the members with an illustrated talk on trees and their characteristics.

For one of the club's meetings, Mr. Kelley succeeded in getting Dr. Cowles of Chicago University, to talk on some of the practical uses of Botany. Dr. Cowles, who has served the government in quite a few cases, spoke to the club about his own experiences in using botany for practical purposes and why he thought Botany would become one of the most important subjects in school lists.

Botany Club planned its biggest event to be a trip to the Sand Dunes. Here, objects of the year's study could be seen in reality, and one of the most interesting places in the United States could be studied. This outing finished Botany Club's activities and so the youngest and fastest growing club in Oak Park closed for another year.

AT the second meeting of the club, during the spring semester, Mr. Kirby proved himself very efficient as a static demonstrator. By his ingenuity he was able to make water mist do real acrobatic stunts. Some of the boys who helped him pronounced his condenser experiments as "quite shocking." One club member proved that Mr. Kirby could put on some "hair raising" demonstrations.

We owe much credit to two members of the Camera Club for the excellent program which they gave us on March 30. We only wish that all distorted conditions could be as successfully corrected as were the pictures that these two succeeded in perfecting. They showed the club how any member who wanted to make an impression in this world could make a lasting one in one-tenth of a second.

At the meeting during Health Week, Miss Everett spoke of the nation-wide campaign. In a few minutes she gave the members a number of helpful suggestions and rules for good health, leaving them with the thought that continuous good health is nothing more than a matter of common sense. Mr. May's classes had charge of the regular program. They illustrated and demonstrated the principles used in illuminous lighting circuits. While Mr. May told of the many schemes of decorative lighting used in theaters and other places, his students explained and demonstrated the workings of these circuits.

The only speaker of this spring semester, outside of the faculty, was Dr. B. D. Barber. He illustrated that problems in dentistry center around preventions even more than with cures. Through his instructive suggestions each member was able to learn some first aid applications of personal benefit.

The Science Club this year has been under the supervision of Mr. Park. Our programs have been very interesting and instructive, and we can pronounce them quite successful.

THE Tatlers, the third section of the Sophomore Club, was organized on April 29. The purpose of the club is to further the interest of students in literature, to study some authors, and their works, not taken up in the regular English courses, and to give those who have writing ability a chance to augment their talent. Thus far we have had two meetings. The foundation laid, Tatlers will, no doubt, furnish an opportunity for Sophomores who, heretofore, have not been able to join an English club.

THE Chess Club had a good start this year with a large membership and many strong players. However, just in the height of the chess season disaster overtook us in the form of the curtailment of all club activities because of the unusual prevalence of influenza in school, and several promising matches had to be postponed. The result of this was that the only games played were with Austin and Lindblom high schools. In our first match Austin was defeated with the score of 4 to 0. In the second match, however, the worm turned and our team received defeat to the tune of 3 to 2. The Lindblom team has improved greatly since last year, but they, also, were forced to acknowledge our supremacy when they were defeated 3 to 2.

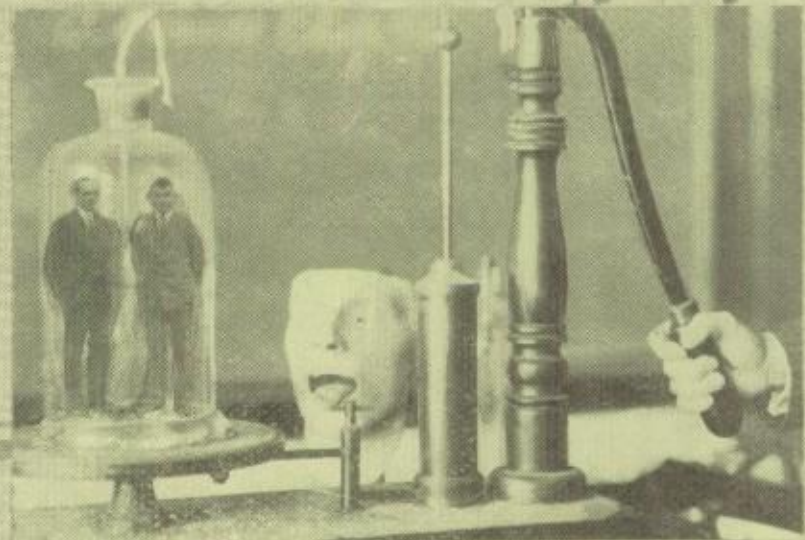

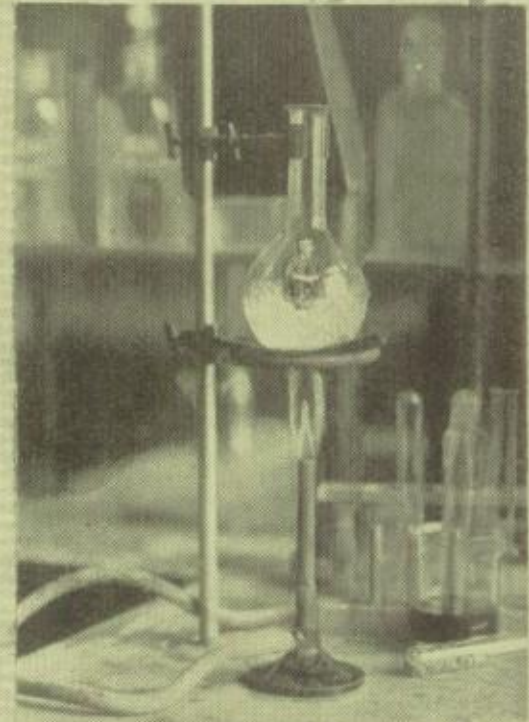

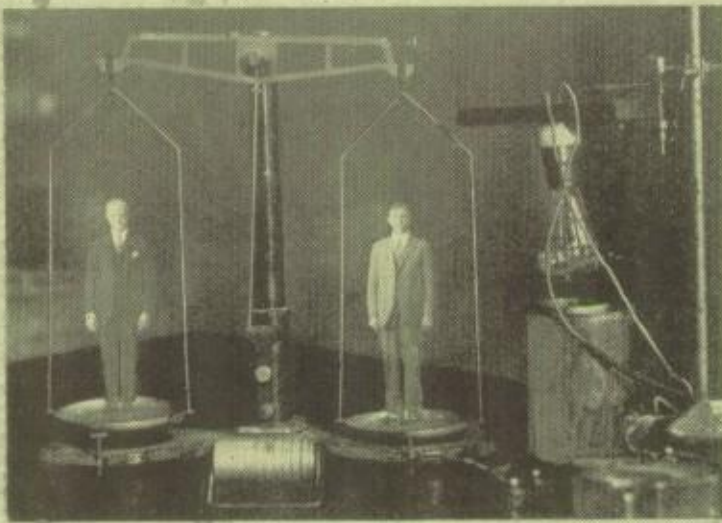

Now that all the restrictions have been removed, we find that most of the other schools have already closed their chess seasons, but we still hope to arrange for a few games before the end of the year.

Since the only requirement for membership in the club is the ability to play chess, we feel that it is the duty of every chess player in school to belong. With this end in view, we respectfully submit our motto for next year: "Every Chess Player a Member."

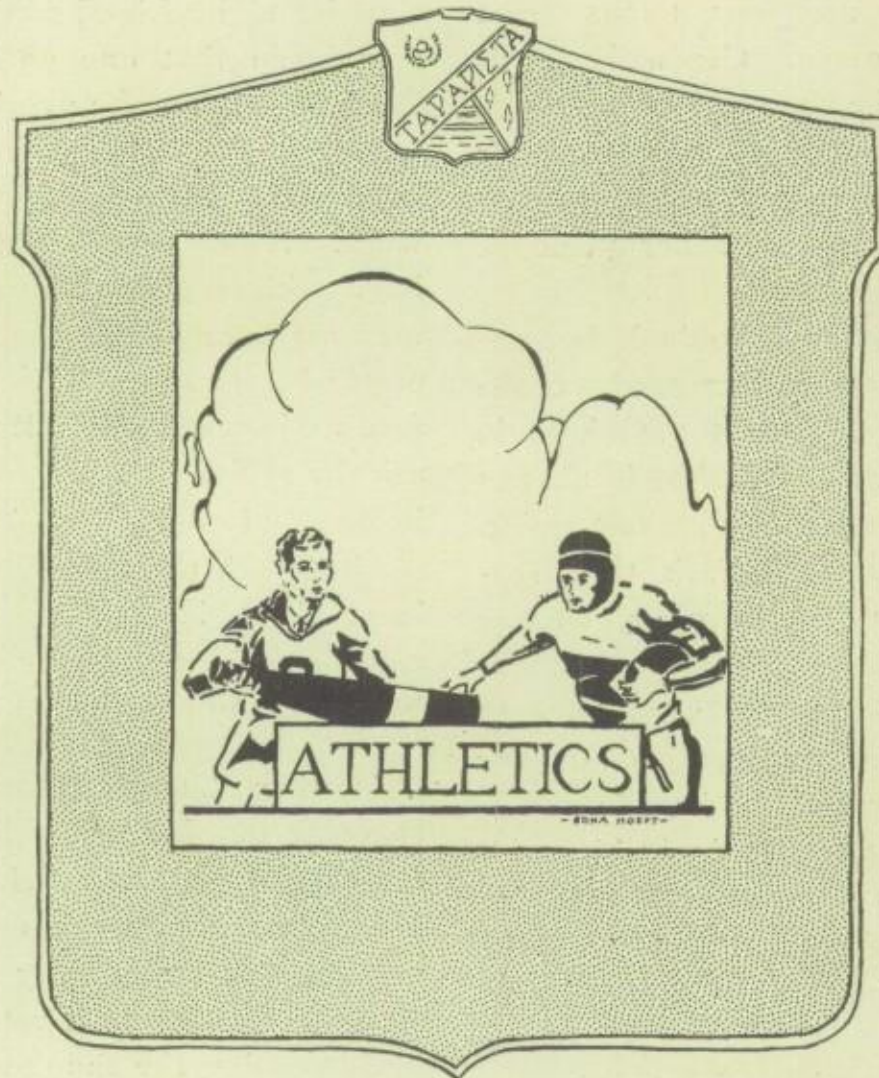

On May 14th the chess team stood as follows:

SENIOR TABULA

1926

“Yea, Oak Park”

OAK PARK has stood in the front ranks of prep-school athletics for many years.

Five years ago Oak Park teams won everything in sight. Championships and large scores were expected, and our teams were feared by all our opponents. Gradually, however, the scores have become closer and victories have been seasoned with losses, until we may well ask ourselves now whether or not Oak Park is yielding somewhat her place of supremacy in the athletic field.

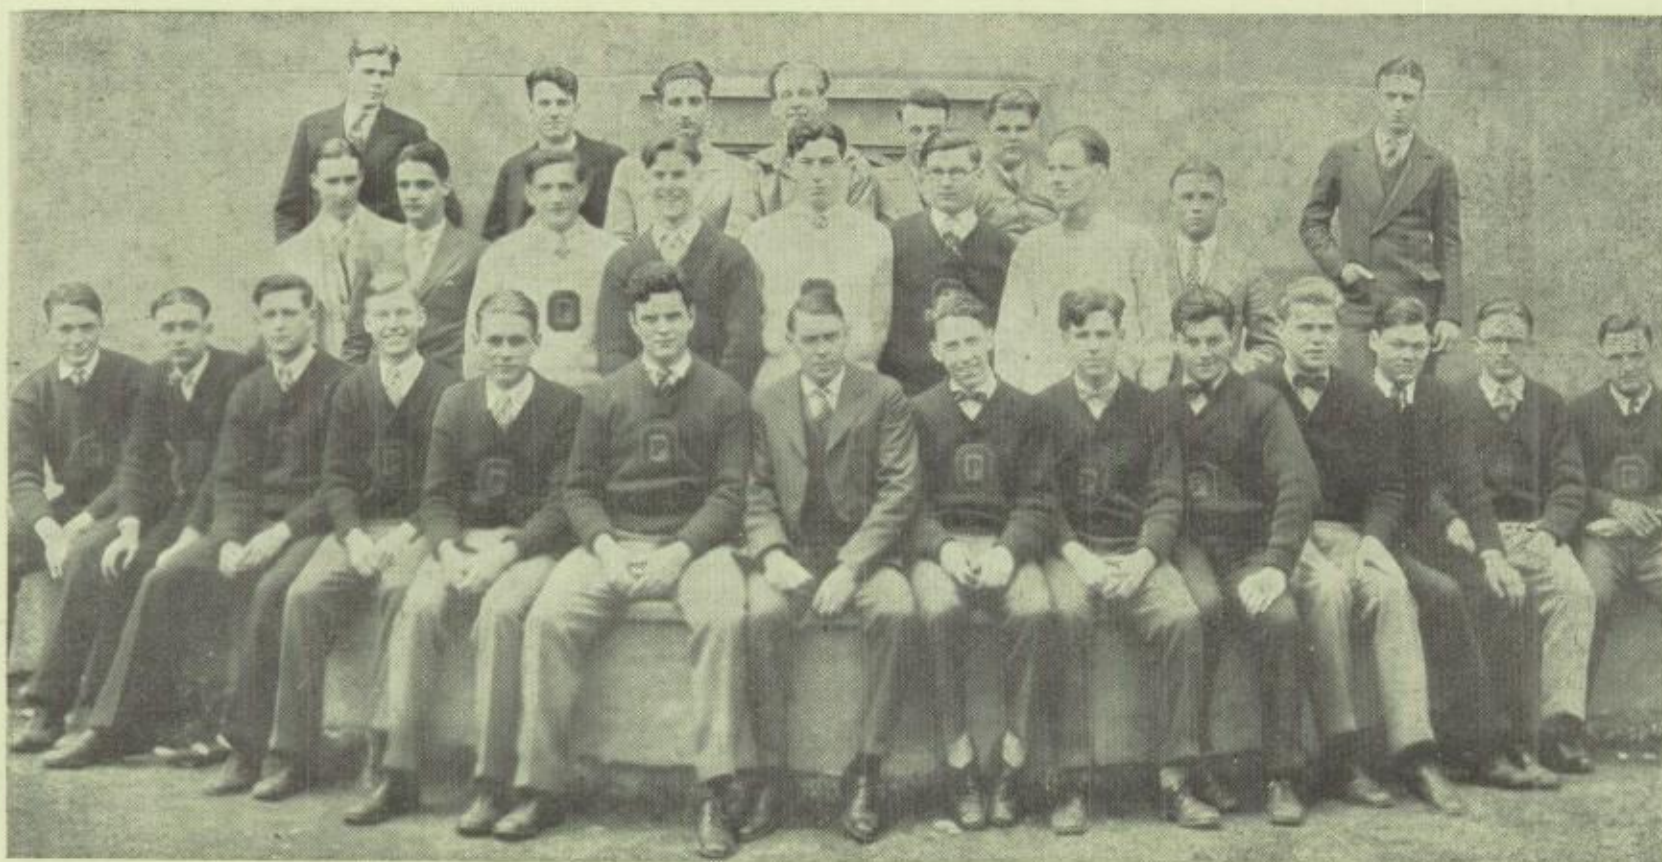

Competition among other schools is becoming greater every year with increased enrollment and better coaching. Then, too, Oak Park, because of her position in athletics, is always faced by a team keyed up to its highest point. If any other school beats Oak Park, their season has been a success. If, however, we are losing ground because of these reasons, there is little that we can do, and we shall have to accept the consequences. But even if Oak Park has the best in coaching and the best in equipment, there is one thing that is lacking for complete success, which no wonderful stadium, field house, or talented coach can take the place of. Oak Park is increasing in enrollment as rapidly as other schools, but where we are losing out is that the number of boys that go out for teams does not increase in proportion to the enrollment. Why is this the case? Is it because boys feel that they have no chance to make the team? If that be so, then where is that Oak Park spirit that we hear about so much?

Every boy that is out for a position on a team makes for competition, and competition for positions results in bringing out the best that is in each player and makes him work harder for his position. Thus it is clear why the plea for more material has been so insistent. Even if a boy is of a selfish nature and looks at the proposition from a material standpoint he will find that it pays to try out for the teams. The personal good that a boy receives when out for athletics amply rewards him for his time and efforts, for is anything worth more than a sound and healthy body? The fellowship and actual fun that one gets on the athletic field are points not to be overlooked by the boy who thinks that practicing every afternoon is merely a grind with nothing to show for all the work. We do not, however, want on our teams boys with selfish motives who think of their own pleasure before the duties of a player. A costly illustration of that has been brought before us just recently. But we are not afraid to ask the selfish boy out to compete for our teams because after he has had some success and worked with the team for a while, he generally loses his selfish motive and in its place he has a pride for his team and school, and his work becomes co-operative.

Another student whom we want especially to come out for teams but who is too seldom seen on the athletic field, is the one who can keep his school work up. A boy who is uncertain in his eligibility each week is a detriment to the team. Even though he be a star, he is wasting the time and energy of the coach and team when he plays one week and is on the bench the next week because of poor grades. A boy that is not as good a player, but who can be relied upon as to eligibility will invariably be used before the star who is unsteady in his school work.

It is queer that in a school like this that boasts of a fine spirit, that there are not more out for the teams—especially when we consider that only after we get more fellows out, will our athletics be what they have been up to the present. Trying out for the teams is the one important factor that will determine the future of athletics in Oak Park High School.

MONOGRAM CLUB has added to its roster this year eleven new members and consists at present of the thirty-two boys in school who have earned major monograms. Those who earned them in basketball, but who did not receive them until the end of the year are not counted in the total, because they were not members during the year. In reality the club is more of an honorary society than an active organization. At its few meetings, though, it accomplished several things. The managers, it was decided, instead of receiving a regulation monogram, should receive in the future, a monogram with the abbreviation M G R. on the top bar of the O, and cheer leaders would have an insignia of two crossed megaphones to put on their sweaters. The managers of the teams are elected by this organization after they have been recommended by Mr. McDaniel and the coaches of the teams.

The officers for the year were Albert Adams, president; Wilbur Burright, vice-president, and John Colovus, secretary.

ALTHOUGH not a championship team, Coach Winters' machine was one of the best in the country. This was brought out when it beat two very strong teams from outside. Both Moline, Ill., and Lansing, Mich., claimed championships, and both went down before our team.

In the league, however, we were not quite as successful. After defeating Austin and La Grange easily, our team met some real opposition when it played Moline. It was only by a supreme effort that we managed to keep Moline from tying the score after we put 13 points on the score board to their 7.

Although Oak Park outplayed Morton on their field, the rain had put the field in such a condition that neither team was able to score. The same might have been true when we next met the undefeated Evanston team if a kick had not been blocked behind our opponent's goal.

The upset of the season came when Proviso took advantage of a slump in our team and handed Oak Park a 13 to 6 defeat. The next week, however, the team could have beaten almost any team in the country. Lansing was the victim of that fighting spirit in our team to redeem itself, and they went down to the tune of 33 to 6, making a fitting climax to a satisfactory, if not completely successful, season.

OUR lightweight aggregation of pig-skin chasers, under the coaching of Mr. Schroeder, again came forth with a victorious season, having won every game, with the exception of Evanston, whose team was composed of freshmen and sophomores of uncertain limitation on weight.

After winning the first game from Lindblom by a 14-0 margin, our colts thought that they were doing well, and came back for rehearsal Monday evening expecting at least a word of praise for their efforts, only to be convinced, as only Mr. Schroeder can convince, that they were not so good, and were still green on many points. This aroused their fighting ire, and they scalped La Grange with a score of 58-0. In this game many men went out on the field for the first time, and it really seemed an insult to La Grange when we trotted out our seventy-pound wing-man to match his brawn with the haymakers. The next contest showed a slight let-up, and the "Visitors" side of the scoreboard was dusted off to make way for Rockford's 7 points against our 14. Waukegan also seemed satisfied with only eighteen points against her, and the next game at Morton resembled a Frosh-Soph mud-fight in a pitiful struggle on the alien field, which surely was water-logged, but which afforded us a 7-0 decision.

Our lone baffle came at the hands of Evanston, who out-played us 13-0 in the first few minutes of play, but another cheer was raised at Maywood when we downed Proviso 22-6 before that heart-breaking defeat of our heavies. A review of the season shows us credited with 133 markers to our opponents' 26.

Major Basketball

LOSING but four games out of fourteen, our basketball team made an enviable record this year. The team was working along in championship form until it was disrupted by the loss of Ted Blum, a sure scorer and a good center, who broke his arm early in the season. Colovus and Fyfe were ineligible after the February graduation, leaving a gap that had to be filled. But with Kerber and Bramhall leading in the scoring and Lavicka and Halperin doing the guarding, the team continued through the season a feared obstacle to other teams seeking the championship. Oak Park lost to Morton, but beat them in a return game. They also lost to New Trier, the champions, and to Elgin, last year's state champions. These games were close, however, and showed our team to be strong.

After winning their practice games, the team started the season off with a 62 to 10 victory over La Grange. Without Blum the team had a tough battle to win from Evanston the next week, but beat Deerfield easily on the following night. The first defeat came at the hands of Morton. It was bitterly contested with Oak Park trailing close throughout the game, but the Cicero boys were too much for our team. Elgin proved a better team than ours when we dropped our next game to them 16 to 29. Proviso, La Grange, Deerfield, Evanston and Austin were all taken into camp, but New Trier, with a scoring combination hard to equal, beat us in both of our games with her. Our victory over Morton was all the more sweet because of the defeat we had taken from their hands earlier in the season.

With a new field house as added stimulus, promising better support from the student body, the outlook for next year seems to be bright. The lack of student support was one factor that may have had something to do with losing the championship this year, for it is certain that when the school takes an interest in athletics and comes to the games in large numbers, the players will do better and more will try out for teams if this support is evident.

Minor Basketball

THE lightweight basketball team, coached by Mr. Carson, has to show for its season's work an even break, winning five league games and losing an equal number. The Evanston and Morton teams seemed to cast a spell over our fellows. Each team beat the lights twice. New Trier also had a hand in our downfall, contributing one defeat. However, the team proudly recollects victories over Proviso twice, La Grange, twice, and Deerfield, once. In the practice games, Oak Park also broke even.

The season's success is largely due to Jake Howard, the captain. He ably led his team to its victories, and even in defeat, he always showed his game fighting spirit. As fit running mates he had Frank Aldrich and Jim Pyott. This trio accounted for practically all of Oak Park's scoring. The defense centered around Ray Bushing and Harry Hodgson. With such men at guard, the forwards were at ease as regards their opponent's attack.

The real worth of the lightweight team is seen in the fact that three players were picked by the Proviso "Maroon and White" as being of All-Suburban caliber. Frank Aldrich was placed on the first team, while Jake Howard and Harry Hodgson were second team candidates.

The season opened with two victories, La Grange being beaten 28 to 14 and Deerfield falling short by a 21 to 12 margin. After that the team hit a slump, being beaten by Morton 39 to 27, and by Elgin 28 to 18. These defeats did not phase the boys, and they came back with three victories, Proviso, LaGrange and Deerfield being the victims. Evanston the jinx, then showed the boys up by a 21 to 16 score. Thanks to a free throw by Urban, Oak Park beat Austin 18 to 17. Another slump affected the team, and it became the prey of New Trier, 19 to 9, of Morton 26 to 24, and of Evanston, 21 to 16.

Although their final rating was not high, the team counts the season a success and hopes for better times next year.

Track

THIS year's track team, under the tutelage of Coach Ticktin, looms as one of the best in recent years. In a series of meets at the University of Chicago, the team won the title of Cook County Interscholastic Champions. The next title won was that of Suburban League Champions. This title was won after a closely contested meet at Northwestern University.

The following week, the National Meet was held at Northwestern. In this, our trackmen placed sixth. Sullivan's first place in the shot put and Sutherland's fifth in the mile accounted for Oak Park's position. This ended the season's indoor activities, and with great anticipation the team looked forward to the outdoor season.

The outdoor season opened at Gary, Indiana. Here, because of very unsatisfactory weather conditions, the team failed to score more than one place, a third in the shot put. At the Wisconsin meet, however, the team showed a complete reversal of form. Here, Sullivan again won the shot put. The two-mile relay team won second place. The distance medley team took first place. The dash men then captured second in the quarter-mile relay and third in the half-mile event.

At the district meet at Evanston, a preliminary to the state meet, Oak Park lost first place to Evanston by one-half point. In this meet, the outstanding feature was Pettigrew's victory in the pole vault. Sullivan ran true to form, winning the shot put and discus. Gress also won his specialty, the half-mile. The state meet on the next week-end furnished the team with a world of competition. The only places taken here were third in the pole vault, fifth in the half-mile and fifth in the shot put. The Tabula goes to press with the National Outdoor Meet to be held at Grant Park on June 5.

High scoring honors go to Sullivan with 38 points. Second place is awarded to Gress with 31 points. Next comes Captain John Sutherland who besides being an excellent miler, is also the moral example for all track aspirants. His sterling work throughout the season was a credit to himself, the team, and the school.

 Second Row—Krueger, Bushing, Dean, Phillip, Laib, Lavicka, Bowman, Houston.
 Front Row—O'Brien, Vasey, Lehman, Bein, Bode, Blum, Urban, Gebhardt.

Baseball

THE 1926 baseball team opened the season most auspiciously this year. Victory after victory fell to their hands. Bushing and Bramhall made first-class pitchers, while Lehman and Bein completed two star batteries. Then, the season only partly over, an unfortunate occurrence robbed the team of four regulars. A reorganization immediately took place, and Mr. Foster's master hand was seen in the renovated team which kept up the good work.

Competition and rivalry for places marked the team's practices until a happy combination was hit upon. Bushing, Cromwall and O'Brien performed from the mound. Lehman and Bein continued to do the receiving. Blum, Lavicka, Skelly, Laib, Urban, and Vasey made a model infield. The gardeners were Just, Sommers, and Dean. Altogether, they formed a fine aggregation, well balanced and full of life and vigor.

The practice games were dispatched in a summary fashion; Austin lost, 17-3; Lakeview did likewise, 4-1; Austin again, 11-0. The league season opened with a 2-0 victory over La Grange. Morton, our last year's jinx, was beaten 8-4. A snag was struck when Deerfield won, 4-0. However, three consecutive victories made up for this in part: Proviso, 3-0; Evanston, 11-6; Deerfield, 5-2. Morton then took a 2-1 revenge for her former loss.

The final scores were: Oak Park 1, Lane 2; Oak Park 2, Proviso 6; Oak Park 6, La Grange 5; Oak Park 8, Evanston 4. We tied for first place in the League.

WITHOUT so much as a home tank, the swimming team, nevertheless, came through the season with only one loss. Every meet was away from home, yet the Oak Park water dogs found only one team too hard to beat. New Trier has the honor of being the team which kept the team from a championship.

Individual honors for the season go to Captain Kerner. With only a few veterans, he formed a practically unbeatable team.

The coaching was done by Mr. Ramsay, who spent much time and trouble getting the team into shape. He and Captain Kerner were ably helped by the veterans Tucker, Snow, Simmons, and Finlay. Newly uncovered stars include McDonald, Elliott, Tucker, Gare, Innes, and others.

Taking the season as a whole, the school is well satisfied with the team's work and looks forward to another championship next year.

YES, 1926 may be counted as one of Atalanta's most successful seasons. The club year was slightly shortened, but due to the co-operation of all the officers and members and the wonderful leadership of Miss Griffin, the faculty adviser, the meetings and parties have been proclaimed a success.

Atalanta is a club formed to stimulate a greater interest in girls' athletics and foster friendship among the girls of all classes. Atalanta is one of the few clubs in school that includes in its membership girls from every class.

It is one of Atalanta's chief aims to make freshmen feel at home as soon as they enter high school, and so for this purpose the freshman party is given. Every freshman is invited by an upper classman and given a good time. A masquerade is also given to which every member always looks forward.

There are certain qualifications necessary to become a member of Atalanta. The State League Point System is used as a basis, and every girl must have twenty-five points in order to join, and she must also make ten each semester following in order to remain on the membership list.

Also at the end of the year awards are given out to girls who have made 150, 300, 400, or 500 points. The awards are a monogram, a pin, a bracelet, and a ring with the Atalanta emblem. This year there have been more awards won than in any previous year.

Girls' Athletics

A NEW era is slowly but surely dawning for the girls' athletics in the Oak Park and River Forest High School, nor has it come suddenly, a surprise to all concerned. Some people are not aware of the change that is taking place, some even refuse to recognize the new order of things, but it is of no use. Our statements can be proved.

Argument 1.—The teaching staff in the girls' gym now consists of five instructors, each and every one of whom is kept busy all day long. What keeps them busy? Do you realize that there are about 1,330 girls in school and some 700 of them are enrolled in at least one gymnasium class, either outside or in the regular curriculum system, while many are down there for more than one activity? Besides the regular teachers there is the nurse, whose work is often closely connected with the gym department.

Argument 2.—The girls' gym department is accomplishing work thought of in very few high schools, and not even attempted in all colleges. This work is along the corrective line. When told about it, people look askance, but when given telling and absolutely correct figures, they open their eyes wide with amazement and praise. They would surely be astonished to know that people in the very school itself do not realize the fineness of their own athletic department. A doctor, prominent in our own village, even admitted that, at times, correct exercise could do more than medicine, and he was exceedingly profuse in his eulogies.

Argument 3.—When the prospective field house is before our eyes, it will contain a wonderful new gymnasium for the girls, with all imaginable equipment and modern showers and locker rooms. The tank will, of course, be opened to the girls at certain times, provided that it is absolutely impossible to get them one of their own. In addition to all this, they will retain the present gymnasium. This will enable the department to provide ample room and time for every girl in school; and it will very likely come to pass that every girl will be required to take gym work as a regular subject all four years, instead of just two as at present.

Argument 4.—In each issue of The Trapeze, space and a reporter are allotted to the girl's gym while now, during the school year 1925-26, each issue of The Tabula itself contained a regular girls' athletic department. In the present issue you will find six pages devoted to the girls; the boys haven't so very many more than that. Besides, there was even some talk of placing the girls' pages before those of the boys. Ladies first, you know. Next year we are promised as much space as the boys, which all goes to prove that those masculine individuals are not all that they may think they are. We know that the girls' athletics department is slowly but surely advancing, and the future looks mighty bright.

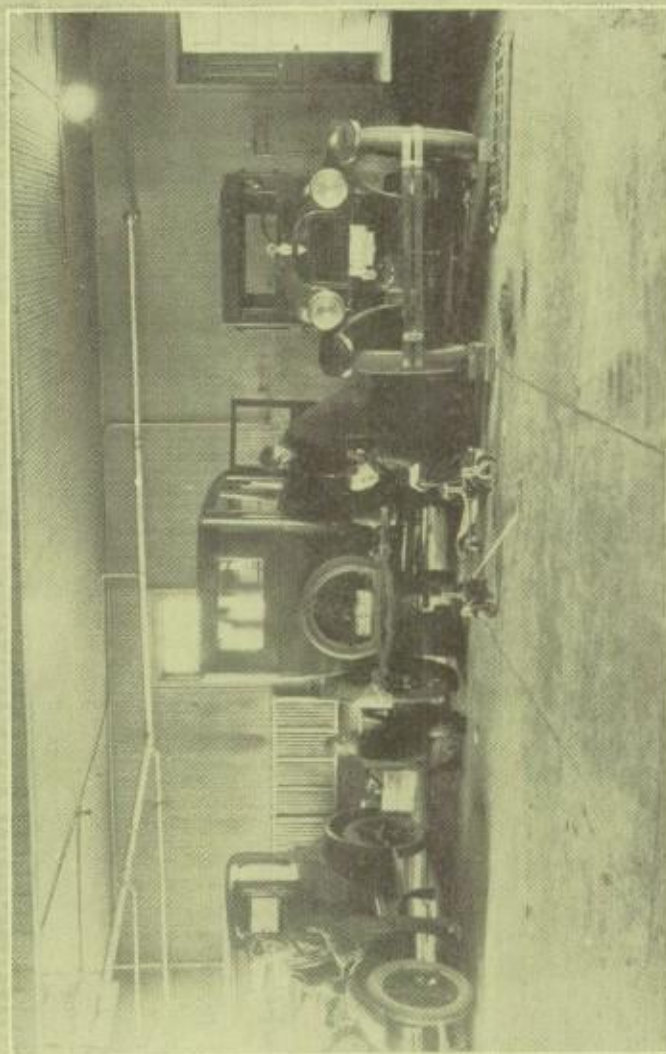

SUCCESSIVE PEDOGRAPHS

These are prints of the same feet, taken November 12, 1925, February 12, 1926, and April 12, 1926. The first one to the left shows flat feet with enlarged joints and cramped toes caused by improperly fitted shoes. Each print shows increasing improvements. Home exercises and two classes per week attained these results in just five months. This is typical of many such cases in corrective work.

More babies, under the age of one year, died in Illinois in 1920 than soldiers in the fiercest battle in France. What is the reason? They did not receive proper care and feeding. We have from 60 to 100 new babies at the West Suburban Hospital all the time. We have taught the right care and feeding to several hundred young women in the past ten years. We want to show you this part of a wonderful life work. Let us show you the finest Nurses' Residence in the country. Our ballroom accommodates fifty couples. We have baseball, tennis and swimming teams. Our working day is eight hours. A student is provided with full hospital uniform as well as a monthly allowance sufficient to pay for books, schoolroom incidentals and a fair amount of spending money. Our theoretical work is accepted in some of the leading universities if the student wants to still further her education.

"Something is rotten in the state of Denmark," mused Hamlet.

"Don't you fool yourself," returned the faithful Horatio. "I'll bet the whole trouble is with your receiving set."

"Why did you hand the boy in the cloak-room such a big tip when he gave you your coat?"

"Just look at the coat he gave me."

The Hard Part

It's hard, these days, to live within one's salary, but there's one consolation—it's harder to live without it.

The Result of the Flat Shortage

Jack—"Hello, Tom, old boy, got your new flat fixed up yet?"

Tom—"Not quite. Say, do you know where I can get a good folding toothbrush?"

First Student: "I'm going to sue my English teacher for libel."

Second Student: "Why? What did he do?"

First Student: "He wrote on my English theme, 'You have bad relatives and antecedents.'"

Girl: (with quivering lips to big heavy-browed man, holding glittering knife) "Have you no heart?"

Big Man: (in growling voice) "No."

Girl: "Then gimme ten cents worth of liver—and maybe we'll order a turkey for Christmas."

The Climax

He was telling a thrilling story out of his wallet of a thousand and one hairbreadth escapes, doncherknow, and his pretty listener was leaning towards him, hanging on his every utterance.

"The wolves were upon us," he said, "bellowing and roaring, as I have so often heard them. We fled for our lives. Every second we knew the ravenous pack was gaining on us. At last they were so near we could feel their muzzles against our legs—"

"Ah!" gasped the lady. "How glad you must have been that they had their muzzles on!"

"Didja hear what happened to Jim?"

"No, what happened to him?"

"He swallowed a dictionary, but nobody can get a word out of him."

Binks (phoning down from his room) — "Night clerk?"

Snippy Clerk—"Well, what's biting you?"

"That's what I want to know."

Jack—"How does Bill like living in the apartment below those college girls?"

Tom—"I don't know. He says the women are wild over him!"

There are men who hanker to occupy posts of danger, says a writer. These are the heroes who volunteer for the task of judging baby shows.

Miss Woodruff: "For what else was Julius Caesar noted?"

U. Hoo: (who has studied the lesson somewhat hastily) "His great strength, ma'am. He threw a bridge across the Rhine."

Chief—"You say the tracks of the criminal were well covered."

Detective—"Yes, with about six inches of snow."

Kindred Associations

"I wonder what attraction that Mrs. Summer can have for Mr. Winter."

"Didn't you know? She is a grass widow and he has hay fever."

“We attract to us what we are”

THAT bit of philosophy abruptly caught our attention from a printed page. How true—“Like attracts like”—“Birds of a feather—,” etc.

Trustworthy people like to deal with those in whom they can feel trust; important men like to do business with important businesses. And when the most significant evidence of dependability, importance, dignity, and self-confidence is the stationery or the advertising-printing of a business firm, how essential that printing by its numerous processes spare no effort in its expression of those attributes.

You will find here a service well worth your acceptance because we interpret our responsibility as expressing both your message and you.

The Kingdom Saved

"Richard III" was being enacted in a small country town, and when the leading man came to the lines, "A horse! A horse! My kingdom for a horse!" some merry wag in the pit called out: "And wouldn't a jackass do as well?"

"Sure," answered the actor. "Come around to the stage door at once!"

The Sufferer—"I'm afraid I've been giving my wife too much rope."

The Sympathizer—"Why, what's happened?"

The Sufferer—"She's skipped off."

A man who recently fell ninety feet to a roadway was found sitting up and smoking his pipe. It is not thought that he has any particular ability for film work as he missed a large puddle.

A Protest

Papa was about to "this hurts me more than it hurts you, Willie," when:

"Father," said Willie firmly, "unless that instrument has been properly sterilized I desire to protest."

Papa paused and Willie continued:

"Moreover, the germs that might be released by the violent impact of leather upon a porous textile fabric but lately exposed to the dust of the streets would be apt to affect you deleteriously."

And as the strap fell from the nerveless hand, Willie beat it.

A Message to Graduates

You are leaving high school and will attend college or enter business.

During your endeavors you will discover that many seemingly unimportant matters will have a direct bearing on your future success or failure.

One fact you will learn is—

You Cannot Discount the Importance of Good Appearance

The theory that you may make the grade in any old clothes doesn't alter the fact that good-looking clothes always help you make the grade easier.

You'll be at your best, if you look your best

Couldn't Understand Plain English

By the extraordinary contortions of her neck he concluded that she was trying to get a glimpse of the back of her new blouse; by the tense line and scintillating flash about her lips he concluded that her mouth was full of pins.

“Umph — goof — suff — wuff — sh — ffspeoy?” she asked.

“Quite so, my dear,” he agreed; “it’s stunning.”

“Ouff — goof — so — gs — ph — mf — ugh — ight?” was her next remark.

“Perhaps it would look better if you did that,” he nodded, “but it fits you very nicely as it is.”

She gasped and emptied the pins into her hands.

“That’s twice I’ve asked you to raise the blinds, so I can get more light,” she exclaimed. “Can’t you understand plain English?”

Flowers for Everybody

TODAY—TOMORROW—EVERY DAY—events are happening calling for recognition, birthdays, anniversaries, graduations, courtesies to acknowledge, favors to repay. In each case, it is the remembering that means so much. The tender thought, the sincere message that makes flowers so appropriate, for "the gift without the giver is bare," but your gift of flowers is YOU.

Oh! So Good!

To Our Friends in Oak Park High:

This isn't an editorial—neither is it a sombre sermon of reflection. But we know that you are stepping out of one of the happiest influences in your lives.

You will probably hear a lot about “passing another milestone” in your career—about the “vistas of opportunity” which open before you. But through the chosen years that follow—be they university or business or home years—Oak Park High will remain in your minds as emblematical of untarnished joy of living.

So we don't know whether to congratulate or condole you. But as a “cold” business concern we will step from behind the mask for a moment to wish you just as much joy in the years to come.

Breaking It Gently

Jack—"Perhaps you don't like my style of dancing?"
Nettie—"Well, it is a little monotonous."
Jack—"Er, how may I vary it?"
Nettie—"Suppose you tread on my left foot once in a while."

Opinions as to the merits of various cars differ widely among the students of Oak Park High. For instance, Radford Barton is loud in his admiration of the Nash; Sayre Bradshaw favors the Packard; Jeanne Godolphin obviously prefers the Ford; and Wells King and Bill Garvey both seem to be satisfied with just Carrs.

Our neighbor broke his wife's favorite phonograph record. He told her about it and she replied:

"Well, that's the only record you ever broke."

Now he asks us whether that's a compliment or a bawling out.
